2010

John of Cermenate

Martina Saltamacchia
University of Nebraska at Omaha, msaltamacchia@unomaha.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.unomaha.edu/medrenstudfacpub

Part of the Medieval Studies Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Medieval/Renaissance Studies at DigitalCommons@UNO. It has been accepted for inclusion in Medieval/Renaissance Studies Faculty Publications by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@UNO. For more information, please contact unodigitalcommons@unomaha.edu.
John of Cermenate

John of Cermenate ca 1280-1344. Town chronicler and notary. Author of Historia Iohannis de Cermenate notarii Mediolanensis in Latin prose, completed ca. 1322.

Presumably he was born in Milan. In 1313 John of Cermenate, as Milan’s syndicus (court of justice representative), took part at a meeting with the imperial vicar of Lombardy. Surely he joined the Visconti faction and sided with the Ghibellines, as evidenced in his chronicle, where Matteo Visconti’s deeds are openly celebrated. His account is divided into 68 chapters and covers the events in Milan during the years 1307-1314. John of Cermenate was eyewitness to the matters he recounted; his contemporaries regarded his chronicle as the most reliable source for the period. The first four chapters narrate the history of the Po valley from the time of Tubal, Noah’s son. Then, in the fifth chapter, the narration of more contemporary events begins with the Longobards and then Henry VII’s arrival in Italy. For his use of Livy, Sallust, Virgil, and Horace as literary and stylistic sources, John of Cermenate is considered to be a forerunner of humanistic scholarship. The chronicle survives in two partial MSS (Milan, Biblioteca Braidense, AD XII, 32 and AD XIV, 55) dating from the 17th c.

1. 13th century, 2. Italian, 3. Italy (North), 4. town chronicles, 5. prose.