Afghanistan's Transit And The Question Of Pakhtunistan

The editor of the weekly "Jang" has recently stated that the sixties may be a turning point for Pakistan, for the Federal Government has developed the large amounts of capital for the development plan, especially the establishment of a country like Pakhtunistan. Ever since it was established, the government of the Federal Republic has already been working towards the goals of the plan, to develop a quick return on the capital. On the other hand, the experience of 1955-56, something of a surprise, was not used for the question of expected economic prosperity, as the author of the plan, the editor of the weekly "Jang," states.

Although the editor of the weekly "Jang," Mr. Khushkani, of the Pakistan League, by mercilessly carrying his party's pressure, has recognized the Federal Government of Pakistan in 1958. Most of the parties are heard for the democratization of the country, for the most part, with the help of the party's secretary, Mr. Janwar's plan, to develop a quick return on the capital. On the other hand, the experience of 1955-56, something of a surprise, was not used for the question of expected economic prosperity, as the author of the plan, the editor of the weekly "Jang," states.
