In your capacity as a professional librarian, what aspects of your job bring you the most joy?

I enjoy finding a good book for a reluctant reader to get them hooked on reading. I think we all remember “the book” that got us hooked and I love the thought of helping students find that for themselves. The process of finding this book for students helps me get to know them better and gives me insight on my collection as well. If I can create a bond with a student then more often than not, they keep coming back! This is very rewarding to me.

I like trouble-shooting problems—whether it be with technology, or a research topic, or whatever comes my way on any given day. Finding a solution to benefit my students or staff is also very rewarding. Collaborating with my staff is one of the highlights of my day. I like working with a teacher to plan a project and see it through to the end. With the teacher's expertise on the content and my knowledge of resources that are out there, we have planned some great activities that benefit student learning. It is all very exciting to watch the learning take place. Ultimately, I like to help others and find it very rewarding when I can do so.

Please discuss one personal characteristic that you feel has contributed to your success as an Information Professional.

Persistence. I am exhaustingly persistent. I don't give up very easily. This persistence has enabled me to exhaust all possible sources and required me to be creative when searching for a solution to a problem. I am also persistent when it comes to working with my students and staff. I like to ensure that they are successful and make numerous attempts to check in with them and their progress. I think this has helped me be successful as an information professional because I find creative ways to solve problems and my students and staff know that I will not give up!

What one issue should future librarians be prepared to address?

2.0 tools into the classroom in a way that is safe and manageable for student use. Teacher librarians should be involved in this process and should be educated on what tools are available and appropriate for educational purposes. I think teacher librarians should play a role in educating staff, students, and parents about these tools and should be seen as a resource in a building/district.

A new teacher approached me with a Powerpoint project that she was going to have her students do on the elements of the periodic table of elements. I asked her why she chose Powerpoint and she said that she, “didn't know what else to do.” So I asked her if she would be willing to try a different presentation tool called prezi.com. Thankfully, this first year teacher was willing to take a chance and we worked together to tweak her project criteria/rubric for the students to use Prezi.

I relied on her knowledge of the content (since I am a former English teacher) and she relied on my knowledge of the tool. She made an example Prezi and I presented on how to use Prezi to the class. The students were in awe of her Prezi and were excited to make one on their own. I was able to work with her and her students for a few days while they were creating the project and the final products were very fun for the students to present. Oftentimes, after the students presented other students would ask how the presenter had made Prezi do a certain “cool trick.”

This was a great teaching and learning experience overall. I was able to establish the trust of a new staff member for future collaboration. We were able to utilize a new presentation tool because the project wasn't too content heavy and the only resource was the textbook. The learning continued throughout the presentations and beyond. Word spread throughout her department and we are doing similar projects in the science department now. As a side note, we still allowed the use of posters and Powerpoint for differentiation purposes.

On a lighter note: When the workday is done, what do you like to read?

For my “lighter” reading, I like Nicholas Sparks and Richard Paul Evans. My book club has gotten me hooked on the Stieg Larsson books (The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo). I also like to read the hot YA books and I’m really into the dystopian books like Unwind and Hunger Games. I’m usually listening to a book in my car and reading 3 or 4 others at a time. There isn’t enough time in the day!

Thank you, Wendy, for sharing your professional insights!

Student Spotlight: Lisa Schwartz
 Librarian, Council Bluffs Community Schools

What is your education / library/experience background?

In 1983, I graduated from the University of Northern Iowa with a bachelor’s degree in Elementary Education with an emphasis in Special Education. I earned an M.S. at Creighton in Learning Disabilities in 1989. I have taught for twenty-eight years, all in Council Bluffs. After teaching special education 4th-9th grade for fourteen years, I moved to general education classes teaching 1st-3rd grade for the next twelve years. Approximately three years ago, I heard Council Bluffs was going to hire elementary teacher librarians, and I LOVE libraries, so here I am having just completed my certification as a teacher librarian!

What is on your reading list? What are your favorites? Your recommended? Your want to read lists?

I have been reading a lot of books of interest to intermediate grade levels lately because I have been doing book clubs. They include: The Jacket, The Graveyard Book, Big Nate, The Boy in Striped Pajamas, and The Unfinished Angel. In my adult life, I enjoy reading Nicholas Sparks and Richard Paul Evans. Some of my favorite classics include The Shepherd of the Hills, To Kill a Mockingbird, and The Grinch Who Stole Christmas. My neighbor, Lorna Seilstad, recently authored her first published book called Making Waves. It is from the Lake Manawa Summers series. Since I was born and raised in Council Bluffs, I’m excited to read her historical fiction novel about our great community. Someday, when I have lots of time, I want to read the Harry Potter books!

What professional journal or article have you read and would recommend? Why?

I have read many lately, but I would recommend Library Media Connection because I feel the articles are current issues and topics, and I enjoy reading the reviews on new books.

What do you do in your “down time”? Do you have any hobbies? How do you relax?

I enjoy watching high school and college football. My teams are the Iowa Hawkeyes, Northern Iowa Panthers, and the Notre Dame Fightin’ Irish. Sorry, all you Nebraska fans! I enjoy movies, cooking, scrap booking, and reading, but my favorite thing to do is travel. It is my personal goal to travel to every continent before I meet my maker!

What deep dark secret would you like to share?

I am curious about past lives, and if I had past lives, where and when did they happen? Just thinking...was I an Egyptian princess, or a woman of the Westward movement? Maybe that is why I love books. They take me to those places and times!

Name one of your personal or professional qualities that will make you a leader in 21st century library and information centers?

By nature, I’m very helpful and patient, and a family trait is the smile, so I guess those would be two of many important personal qualities beneficial for a library information specialist, welcoming and helpful. I have never been afraid of new academic pursuits, which keeps me current in what is going on in preparing people to navigate their way through the ever-changing 21st century. I am fascinated with what technology can do for us, and in helping others see how it can help them.

What advice do you have for other students who are currently enrolled in Library Science studies?

Well, never put off until tomorrow, what you can do today! Life can be overwhelming at times, but I find it is just best to dig in and you'll be amazed at what you can accomplish! Never lose the desire to learn. At 50, I feel I'm just beginning when it comes to embarking on the 21st century!

What do you see as key future trends and challenges for Library Information Specialists?

Keeping up with all the information out there and the ever-changing technology is huge! There is something new all the time, therefore, if you slow down for a moment on what's out there, you get behind in the game quickly. I feel it is important for me to attend as many professional development opportunities as possible. Of course, money will always be a barrier to what schools can do because the technology is expensive. We need to be mindful consumers of how and what we do with the money we have.

What do you think will be your legacy in this profession?

I hope the fact that I have been in school nearly every year of my life is witness to how much I value education. Libraries are an important asset to every school. Since school libraries have not been a priority in Council Bluffs for a while, I hope that I will be remembered as someone who fought to keep school libraries as an integral part of our schools. I know that the teacher librarians in Council Bluffs must advocate for our libraries, as well as the importance of being collaborators to help move students and teachers in the acquisition of 21st century skills. Currently the school libraries in Council Bluffs are viewed as only places that have someone checking in and out books. Our libraries need to be viewed as an important center of information resources, with teachers who are viewed as the information specialists of the school. We don’t know everything, but we know how to go out and show folks how to get the information they need. We need the support of our district, and administrators won’t know what we need if we don’t tell them.

Thank you, Lisa, for taking the time to share your talents and your ideas!

“Libraries allow children to ask questions about the world and find the answers. And the wonderful thing is that once a child learns to use a library, the doors to learning are always open.”

2010 AASL Fall Forum Reflections

Deborah Kendell and Helen Cologne had the opportunity to attend the 2010 AASL Fall Forum, IN FOCUS, held in Portland, Oregon. Here is what they have to say about their experiences.

Deborah Kendell: As a pre-service librarian, the AASL Fall Forum in Portland, Oregon was an inspiring opportunity. The keynote speaker, Paige Johnson from Intel, used the business world phrase “eating your own dog food” to describe the format of the forum. That is to say that, in addition to the wealth of information contained in the presentations, the teachers experienced learning in the manner they expect to use with students. Using social networking technology, the participants actively participated in developing essential questions at the heart of the library sciences. Groups collaborated to choose burning questions related to the 21st Century Skills and the specific needs of the teachers and students in their home schools, created action plans, and engaged in discussions as ‘critical friends,’ to refine the thinking of the group. Exhausted and invigorated, I returned from the forum with a suitcase filled with notes, more books than I probably should have purchased and, most importantly, the experience of meeting and collaborating with school librarians from across the country. It was a memorable combination of enduring understanding and the beginning of enduring friendships.

Helen Cologne: The 2010 AASL Fall Forum, IN FOCUS: The Essentials for 21st-Century Learning-- was held in Portland, Oregon on November 5 and 6, 2010. There were four phenomenal speakers, Paige Johnson, Gail Dickinson, Leslie Maniotes, and Ross Todd. Each speaker helped me make connections and adjustments to my own library program, provided insight into ways information literacy can be elevated for the 21st Century learner, and left me with skills to ask essential questions, check for enduring understanding, and how to use effective strategies.

One essential question posed by Paige Johnson that has plagued me since the conference is, “How do we make learning as relevant, rigorous, and meaningful inside of schools as outside?” She stated that the new reality is that the 21st century learner will need a “portfolio of skills” not just job skills. Paige also highlighted the key skills in the 21st century as “critical thinking, collaboration, communication, and creativity.”

It was a wonderful time to connect with school librarians from across the nation to exchange stories, ideas, and friendship. My thanks to Dr. Pasco for providing me with this extraordinary experience!
Things To Consider

Stop Having A Frustrating Career

Are you having a tough time in your career? Have you been laid off and are still looking for work? Are you overworked, stressed, and tired in your present position, and are unable to visualize a solution? Sometimes we believe it is the economy’s sole fault that we are having such a difficult and frustrating time. And, we have a long list of evidence to prove our beliefs. People around us are getting laid off or can’t find a job. Every day another upsetting story appears that reinforces our fear. We worry about our future, and wonder what will happen to us.

Each day we get more and more discouraged. And, many of you have given up. (Even if you have not admitted this to yourself yet.) Here's something to think about: If you believe that a disappointing career is the best you can expect, it will become your reality (and your future.) Your career gets better when you make it better. It may not be easy, and you will have to overcome your fear of the unknown, but it is possible to get what you want in your career despite what is happening around you. So, How Can You Get What You Want In Your Career? Follow These 5 Steps Below:

1. Stop Talking About What Happened (Or, What Is Happening)

Are you unable to forget the day you were laid off? Are you still upset about it? Are you still steaming inside? Yes, we all know what happened to you. (We've heard it a thousand times.) And, we understand and feel your pain. But the more you talk about the situation, the longer you will be stuck there.

2. Stop Believing You Are The Only One With Problems

No matter how dire your career may seem right now, there is someone worse off than you. What are you grateful for? Some people do not even have as much as you. Who can you help? Making a difference in other people's lives is one of the reasons we are here on this planet. Helping others will keep your mind off your troubles and allow you to feel better about yourself.

3. Stop Over Thinking Everything

Our careers are not as complicated as we make them. Is there a career goal you want to reach? Make a plan and then execute it. What stands in the way of you doing something so straightforward? Fear, worry, and a need to make sure everything will work out first? Life is not about guarantees. You do the work first, and you receive the rewards second. It is not the other way around. It's always a good idea to consider your alternatives before making a decision, but over thinking and over analyzing before you take action, will keep you from reaching your goal.

4. Stop Making Excuses

Are you a busy person? Yes. Do life and responsibilities get in the way? If you let them. It's time to tell the truth. You do not have what you want in your career. You can say an outside force distracted you, or you have been trying hard and getting nowhere, but have these sentences gotten you any closer to your goal? Maybe you haven't been ready to go after what you really want. Or, you need a new approach. Maybe you were not sure a certain direction was the one you wanted to take. Uncertainty is understandable. But uncertainty holds you back. Do not put faith in your excuses; take responsibility for creating them, so you can move forward instead.

5. Start Moving

At times you will not feel like sending out one more resume or making one more phone call. At times you will not feel like dealing with all the work and stress at your present position. Usually the one thing you do not feel like dealing with is what brings you the solution you are seeking. Nothing worthwhile is easy in the beginning. But over time, you will see results, if you start now.
