Guides to Developing Service-Learning Programs

WHO WE ARE AND HOW TO CONTACT US

The National Service-Learning Cooperative Clearinghouse (NSLCC) collects and distributes information about service-learning programs, events, organizations, consultants, and media resources. This information is formatted and stored in a database. We then provide access to this database in several ways:

1. By searching the database in response to individual requests from our toll-free phone line or e-mail.
2. By downloading records to our gopher server for searching and browsing via the Internet (at gopher.nicsl.coled.umn.edu).
3. By selecting database records that match a particular topic or format and publishing the results for general distribution.

NSLCC does not distribute or circulate library resources or the publications of third-party organizations. Instead, we provide contact information for the source that distributes a particular resource, sponsors an event, or implements a program. If you have any questions about our services or this document, please contact us via one of the following:

Toll-free phone: (800) 808-SERV (7378)
Phone: (612) 625-6276
Fax: (612) 625-6277

ABOUT THIS DOCUMENT

This document lists those guides in our collection which are most pertinent to service-learning. Each citation provides bibliographic information, an indication of the type of guide, a program grade level, and the source or sources where the guide can be obtained. If an abstract was available from the ERIC database or the author it is included. The next edition of this document will include a greater number of abstracts as our staff continues to abstract and index materials. The guides included in this document meet the following criteria:

1. NSLCC has a copy of the resource on hand for reference by staff members and for cataloging purposes.
2. The resource provides practical or instructive information which can be applied to other situations, and therefore, is classified as a guide.
3. The resource’s format is print rather than video.
4. The guide as a whole, or in part, directly discusses service-learning.
5. The resource can currently be obtained either from the party responsible for producing it or from a secondary source such as a document delivery service.

The NSLCC database contains records about other guides and media resources which are not included in this document. Guides which have not been included because they do not directly discuss service-learning, but do cover closely related topics such as “dropout prevention” or “social action” may be very useful. We can search the database individually to locate additional titles which meet specific purposes. Please call our toll-free number to request a search tailored to individual needs.

The type of guide is assigned as follows: Program Development Guides are the most comprehensive, containing information about one or more administrative topics as well as information about curriculum and/or service activities. An Administrative Guide contains information about several administrative topics. Within this type there are several Administrative types which are more specific: - Collaboration, - Funding, - Legal Requirements, - Staffing or Training, and - Program Evaluation. A Content Development Guide assists in developing curriculum and service activities but does not include administrative topics. Two specific Content types focus on particular aspects of content development: - Curriculum, and - Service Activities.
Program grade levels are designated as: Pre-K, General K - 12, Elementary, Middle School/Junior High, High School, or Postsecondary. Postsecondary is used for higher education, vocational education, GED equivalency, and young adult programs.

Resources are divided into two sections; Section 1 contains books, reports, and other monographs; Section 2 contains journal articles. Within each section resources are organized by subject classification and then alphabetically by title.

HOW TO OBTAIN RESOURCES
The Clearinghouse does not circulate or distribute the resources listed in this publication. Information is included in each citation indicating where to obtain the resource. You may also be able to obtain some resources by requesting an interlibrary loan through your local librarian. We have listed the authoring organization as the source if that organization still distributes the guide. Some resources, particularly journal articles, are not available from the author. In these cases, we list one of the following document delivery organizations as the source:

EDRS (ERIC Document Reproduction Service)
Citations marked “EDRS” indicate that a paper or microfiche copy of the resource can be purchased from ERIC’s document delivery service. Contact them at:

EDRS
DynTel Corporation
7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110
Springfield, VA 22153-2852
Phone: (800) 443-3742. Fax: (703) 440-1408.

University Microfilms International
Journal articles marked as available from “University Microfilms Int’l.” can be obtained from:

UMI InfoStore
500 Sansome St, Suite 400
San Francisco, CA 94111-3219
Phone: (800) 248-0360. Fax: (415) 433-0100.

Dissertations can also be ordered from the InfoStore location if you have a UMI deposit account. If not, order dissertations from:

UMI

This book presents 7 case studies of middle school youth service programs that challenge their participants to change from takers to givers and from observers to active members of the community. Chapter 1 discusses new ways for responding to the needs of middle school youth and promoting community service. Chapter 2 describes a tutoring program in which Hispanic at risk middle school students tutor Hispanic at risk elementary school students. Chapter 3 describes a combined academic and community alternative for potential dropouts. Chapter 4 describes a program that helps keep middle school youth from being recruited into gangs. Chapters 5, 6 and 7 describe, respectively, programs that bring youth into nursing homes to enrich the lives of the elderly and to increase the understanding of the old by the young; involve junior high school students in community service projects; and place students in a school based community service program. Chapter 8 describes the integration of community service with learning in 40 schools; while Chapter 9 discusses lessons learned from the case studies in terms of youth services issues and new directions for middle school students. The book contains 2 brief forewords by Senator Dave Durenberger and Senator Edward M. Kennedy respectively. Related materials and a directory of case study programs are appended (ERIC).

   This publication is the second of three volumes of a resource book intended for anyone who wants to start, strengthen or support a program or course that combines community and public service with learning. This volume, which is organized in four parts, provides a variety of practical issues and ideas for programs and courses that combine service and learning. Part I contains twenty nine articles on topics including: project ideas for service learners of all ages, tips on establishing and cultivating school agency relationships, legal issues and the issue of compensation, youth program models and practical advice for recruitment. Parts II, III and IV contain profiles of specific programs and courses that combine service and learning. Specifically, Part II focuses on college and university courses and programs; Part III profiles programs and courses in twenty nine Kindergarten through twelfth grade schools; and Part IV describes community based organizations, government programs and youth serving agencies (ERIC).

This seven part series is introduced with a Program Manual which defines service learning, provides a brief history, reviews its use in grades K - 12 and with special populations, and outlines the service learning process. The series continues with six facilitator guides and student workbooks designed to build specific skills. The first book, "Heartbeats of the Community", introduces students to ways of exploring their communities and helps them develop a series of tentative conclusions about the community's key problems and possible solutions. The second book, "Working with Community Agencies", helps students connect with organizations and understand their role in the community. The third book, "Advisory Councils and Career Exploration", involves students in the creation of a council to support the school's service learning program. The fourth book, "Parents as Partners in Service Learning", involves parents in the process as resources. The fifth book, "Getting the Message Out", concentrates on effective promotion.

Board game provides a simulated experience to assist educators in developing their skills for integrating service learning into their curriculum in order to enhance academic learning. The object of the game is for each team of four to six players to practice developing learning objectives which are connected to service learning projects. Includes game board, spinner, one playing piece, dice, three decks of Service Project cards, one deck of Last Chances cards, wipe-off crayon, and a set of record sheets.

Article excerpted from "Severe Behavior Disorders of Children and Youth. Monograph in Behavioral Disorders. Summer, 1983." The article reports the results of several years of efforts to directly teach caring behavior and values to troubled children and adolescents through a curriculum based on service learning. Provides concrete suggestions for developing successful projects. While this article is not available separately, the entire monograph is available from EDRS in microfiche form -- request ED239432.

This workbook is designed for use in training sessions to introduce service learning practitioners to the evaluation process and to generate a local support network for practitioners. The design portion guides the practitioner in developing a self directed study for their own program and is formatted for use with or without a formal training session. The first section lists 22 resources to assist users in doing research, particularly qualitative studies. The following section guides production of a needs analysis which defines information to be gathered, the audience who will use the information, and expected outcomes of using the information. Next, a formal study plan is written using the needs analysis. Two appendices provide additional tools for prioritizing study questions and determining the method of collecting and organizing data. Part 2 provides workbook examples and a sample plan to stimulate thinking. The final section reports actual workshop results.

   Service learning provides a means to revitalize education by transforming the relationship between communities and schools. This guide provides teachers with the concrete tools needed to mobilize K-8 students in youth service programs. Part 1 introduces the concept of service learning and outlines potential outcomes. Part 2 offers ideas for starting a program including: scheduling, liability issues, family involvement, team building, and reflection. Learner outcomes are linked to specific curriculum areas. Describes initiative games to help students learn basic skills for projects and provides handouts and forms. Part 3 offers 15 sample activities grouped in K-2, 3-5, and 6-8 grade clusters and includes enrichment and remediation ideas. Reviews developmental levels of children to help identify characteristics students may bring to the experience. Part 4 lists supporting materials and organizations in directory form. The overall guide is indexed by topic and activities by issue area and academic subject.

Defining service learning as the formal integration of public service into student instruction and learning, this guide provides teachers with ideas for narrowing the gap between what students do in school and what they will do after they leave school. The example activities, derived from actual projects, demonstrate the nearly limitless range of possibilities for service learning. The guide is divided into four sections. The first section provides examples of interdisciplinary projects, by grade level: intergenerational projects, tutoring and mentoring projects, environmental and recycling projects, school improvement projects, and others. The second section offers single-discipline projects, by subject and grade level. The third section offers practical information on the steps involved in establishing service learning programs. The fourth section contains descriptions of useful publications on service learning and annotated lists of organizations at the local, state, regional, and national levels that can provide information and resources to people interested in initiating or expanding service learning. Throughout the guide, "Program Profiles" provide fuller descriptions of exemplary service learning programs in schools and organizations in the southeastern United States and across the country. Appendices contain standards for service learning, an exercise for identifying nearby service opportunities, a sample interdisciplinary planning form, and other information. Contains a 123-item bibliography. (ERIC)

This publication defines "service learning" as an instructional strategy in which students are involved in experiential education in real life settings and where they apply academic knowledge and previous experience to meet real community needs. The publication is intended for persons who are interested in enriching learning through community service. The centerpiece of the publication is a section that identifies the goals of this Minnesota program and lists individual service learning outcomes. One of the three program goals states that learners should understand the cause and effect relationship through "doing". Model learner outcomes associated with this goal and the others are put forth as examples to aid local school districts in implementing the program. The other sections of the guide present the mission, values, philosophy and goals of education, provide definitions and present ideas for integrating youth community service learning into the curriculum. Ten appendices feature resources, legislation and articles concerning youth service. A lengthy list of references also is included (ERIC).

Summarizes research conducted by the Serve America Curriculum Writing Project, describing effective methods of starting a service learning program with an academic focus. Describes project methodology and reports results by presenting models of two community based and three school based programs in Minnesota. Each profile describes background, mission, goals, funding sources, curricular strategies, replication, academic outcomes, community outcomes, and supporting materials. A separate section describes how each model meets the four National Youth Service Initiatives: (1) promotion of youth and leadership development; (2) integration of service learning into state and local curriculum; (3) linkage of project to education reform; and (4) linkage of the project to other major service efforts. The models profiled relate to homeless people, a river watch, special needs of at risk youth, youth employment and housing, and court correctional services.

Rural communities can successfully integrate service learning into academic subject areas. In service learning, students develop a deeper understanding of academic subjects while engaging in meaningful service to their school or greater community. Barriers to implementing service learning in rural areas include lack of time, transportation, student supervision and teacher experience. Schools can begin by identifying and expanding voluntary community service activities already being done by school age children and youth. Instructional time is not wasted when projects involve skills such as typing or proofreading a mailing list for a service agency, monitoring the local water supply or interviewing community residents. Innovative ways of finding transportation for students to engage in service activities are suggested. Experienced students and adult volunteers can serve as trainers and supervisors for new students entering a project. Teachers can be trained through courses in service learning or by mentors who supervise adult volunteers. Service learning in the school could involve peer tutoring, beautification projects or light maintenance. All these activities integrate help to the community with academic skill building (ERIC).

Guide aims at integrating service learning into the curriculum by assisting program leaders in identifying sources of funding and other program resources. The introduction includes charts depicting service learning outcomes and a continuum of curriculum integration. The funding guide lists 130 federal sources of funds supporting activities related to developing K-12 service learning initiatives. Sources are arranged by their general purpose as follows: education; educational improvement; humanities or social sciences; mathematics, science, and technology; partnerships; school-to-work force; students with special needs; out of school youth; youth development; substance abuse prevention; health education; juvenile delinquency prevention; aging; child care; community development; environment; health care; human services; and literacy. Each profile lists eligibility requirements, funding amount, uses, agency name, and an example of a program which might be supported. Funding sources are also indexed. The resource guide lists 21 organizations which assist or produce materials to assist in program design and implementation. Each profile describes the organization's mission and lists services, projects, and publications. Another 15 organizations are briefly described. Complete contact information is provided for both funding sources and organizations.

Program objectives of the Giraffe Project are to encourage youth to stand tall for the common good, acquire basic skills, and develop independent learning capabilities. Standing Tall uses examples of real people who improved the world by sticking their necks out to assist learning. The teaching guide is divided into four sections, each containing lesson plans, activity sheets, and suggestions for enrichment activities. Each lesson describes objectives, methods, group size, and required materials. A reference section lists Giraffe Projects to contact for information and materials, a bibliography, a membership application, and an evaluation form. The video introduces Ann and John Medlock, founders of the Giraffe Project, and profiles people who have been honored as Giraffes for the exemplary courage they have shown through community service.

Community service learning was implemented in the Springfield Public Schools to develop and instill in all students an awareness, understanding, and appreciation of community, citizenship, and the responsibilities each citizen has to help others. The first section establishes links between community service learning and specific academic curriculum and then outlines a method of developing a program. The next five sections present model programs based on five themes: intergenerational, homeless or hungry, citizenship, community health and safety, and environment. Each model includes an overview and examples of how service experiences can become the focus of an activity in school and in the community. Each example details learning objectives and outcomes, potential service recipients, curriculum activities, reflection activities, and supporting resources.

The booklet suggests approaches and methods to help the teacher or program leader maximize students' learning from their community involvement. The purpose is to provide practical suggestions for encouraging young people to reflect on their participation in the community programs. The suggestions will help secondary students think about their experiences, write about them, share them with others, and learn from them. Four basic assumptions underlie the ideas and activities presented: youth participation programs can and should do more than simply release students from school in order to work in the community; growth and learning are not an automatic consequence of even the most engaging community experience; most people do not commonly reflect on the meaning of experience; and most teachers are looking for ways to help students learn from their experiences. The first two chapters of the booklet define what a program's reflective component should contain and suggest alternative ways of incorporating them into existing or new programs. The remaining chapters provide sample activities that can be directly applied or easily adapted to most observation reports, and develop a product. Activities which allow students to evaluate themselves are also provided (ERIC).

Under Subtitle B Part I, Serve America, of the National and Community Service Act of 1990, $1.1 million was awarded to fund 44 school based service learning programs in Pennsylvania. A study collected data on program implementation and impact on students, Serve America coordinators and supervisors during visits to 43 sites and at meetings with site coordinators. Disseminator (schools and community based organizations) and minigrant (service learning) programs were funded. 5 variables were evaluated as indicators of implementation: organizational commitment, parental support, advisory councils and materials. 10% of all programs benefited from all 5 variables being strong and reinforcing. More than 50% were implemented as planned. Generally, students expressed satisfaction, but their dissatisfactions included lack of support from school staff and other students, not enough time at sites and insufficient clarity concerning the program and their roles. The program increased coordinators' personal satisfaction and excitement, but added stress and work. Service learning had both a positive and negative impact on supervisors. Stressors were longevity and institutionalization of the programs, loss of funding and involvement of all students. Challenges were identified and recommendations were made to develop a vision statement and a work plan. 3 elements of an evaluation system were already in place: empowered evaluation, tracking and monitoring, and mentoring/consultant infrastructure (ERIC).

The challenge of building assessment into the curriculum has led the author to closely examine the expected outcomes of her teaching. Her experiences with students participating in projects that involved helping needy people in the community demonstrate the difficulty and advantages of implementing authentic assessment. The middle school students she teaches have collected items for the needy, conducted a cross cultural study of the community, and planned visits to a retirement home. All of these projects have taught students the importance of teamwork, along with problem solving skills and consensus decision making skills. Students are also responsible for assisting in the development of evaluation criteria and assessments. Some assessment approaches that have been used are: (1) performance rating scales; (2) video assessment; (3) demonstrations; (4) audio tapes; and (5) written reflections on the activity. Benefits to the students and benefits to the teacher are recognized (ERIC).

This booklet examines the theory and practice of projects that involve secondary students in community services. Through such involvement, young people will develop positive attitudes toward community participation that will persist throughout their adult lives. Community service projects represent an important and exciting way to bring democracy to life for young people and to demonstrate to them that they can solve problems and make vital contributions to improving the quality of life in their communities. The booklet begins by discussing the place of community service in the school program. The rationale and objectives of a school citizenship program and criteria for community service projects are discussed. Some existing community projects involving secondary students are then described. Practical matters involved in developing community service programs are discussed. These include identifying community needs, defining personnel roles, scheduling and time considerations, financial considerations and project planning. The last two sections discuss evaluation of projects and the future with regard to community service education. The booklet concludes with a bibliography (ERIC).

This book reviews why a community based organization should involve youth in service and describes how to start a youth service program. The forward and Chapter 1 explain the impact youth volunteerism has on youth, organizations, and communities. Chapter 2 distinguishes various types of youth service. Chapter 3 summarizes the history of youth service at the national level and within the state of Minnesota, reviewing important legislation, organizations, and programs. Chapter 4 prepares administrators to design youth service programs by outlining youth skills, youth viewpoints, and program examples for five age groups. Chapter 5 is designed as a workbook to guide organizations through the planning process, ensuring that components of an effective program are developed. Chapter 6 discusses practical issues that program administrators often face such as legal responsibility and student transportation. Chapter 7 lists criteria for excellence to use in evaluating youth service programs and then briefly profiles 59 model programs from Minnesota. A resource directory lists 64 nation wide organizations that support youth service.

This guidebook was developed to provide assistance to persons wishing to begin, expand or promote programs of youth community service. It features examples of what young people already are doing and practical, down to earth ideas for designing, organizing, running, promoting and supporting youth service programs. Special attention is given to school based programs because that is where most of the young people are and where there are often the most difficult structural barriers to involvement. The first section, "What Youth Can Do", illustrates a number of ways in which youth can and do help in working with a variety of problems and populations. Next is a section entitled, "Program Models", outlining the ways in which community service can be integrated into the organizational structure of youth agencies and schools. The next five sections ("Setting Up the Projects", "Developing Your Own Projects", "Recruitment", "Liability" and "Transportation") deal with the nuts and bolts issues of starting a program and keeping it running smoothly. The next section, on "Learning from Service", offers practical suggestions for helping young people maximize the learning opportunities in their service experiences. The final two sections, "Rationale" and "Closing Note", summarize the key reasons to be involved with community service. The document contains some suggested exercises for teachers and others working in this field, and sample administrative forms, a short bibliography and a listing of youth service resources are included as appendixes (ERIC).

The purpose of this paper is to provide information to practitioners who are establishing and implementing volunteer programs on their campuses. First, the historical and contemporary roots of civic participation by students in American higher education is explored in three historical phases: (1) higher education as preparing an elite group of men for service in the secular and religious life of the new nation; (2) higher education’s post Civil War development of specialized academic disciplines; and (3) the current concentration on developing and training experts rather than producing generally educated people. Next, the paper examines the types of volunteer programs currently found on college campuses. This is followed by a discussion of the essential components that make up a model volunteer program in higher education, including: the need for collaboration and communication between the institution and community agencies; financial support from the college, and ideally, the community; comprehensive training and support for participating college students as well as those who are being helped. Finally, the paper discusses two stages of assessment that are necessary in order to implement a volunteer program, and concludes by listing ten characteristics of an effective service learning volunteer program. Contains twenty eight references (ERIC).

This report summarizes the proceedings of a conference, "Leading the Way: Partners in Volunteerism," that brought together 170 educators, nonprofit organizations and students to promote youth volunteerism. In a series of plenary sessions and workshops, attendees discussed the issues that have an impact on the creation and operation of effective volunteer programs for young people. Following the introduction and opening statements, session topics included: (1) successfully recruiting young volunteers; (2) keeping young people involved in a volunteer program; (3) how to make a volunteer experience meaningful; (4) leadership opportunities for young volunteers; (5) practical realities of using young volunteers; (6) plenary session with keynote speech by J. Richard Munro; (7) supervising young volunteers; (8) getting young volunteers off to a good start; (9) training for school and nonprofit staff; (10) locating resources; (11) how nonprofits and schools can work together more effectively; and (12) model programs. Contains 51 resources and suggested readings (ERIC).

Examination of 4 programs in which young people have consistently excelled shows common elements, despite differences in setting, population and goals. The 4 programs, which exemplify problem solving, peer counseling, community service and communication, respectively, include: (1) the Youth Action Program in New York City, a community improvement program created and run by East Harlem youth with the help of adult facilitators; (2) the Rap Room, located in a Hartsdale, New York, high school, a drop in peer counseling center staffed by students trained by a school psychologist; (3) the Family Life Theatre in New York City, in which, with the help of adult mentors, high school students develop and present short skits on health related issues for other young people and community groups; and (4) Youth Communication/Chicago Center in Chicago, Illinois, in which teenagers, with the help of adult facilitators, work to promote positive ideas about the role of adolescents in society. Elements common to all, and which seem to be requisites for excellence, are meaningful and challenging work, a collaborative group that allows for both structure and flexibility and provides responsible roles for youth, facilitating roles for adults that permit careful preparation and training of youth, opportunities for reflection and rewards for excellence (ERIC).

Guide introduces service learning as a method of teaching citizenship, instilling a service ethic, and helping students acquire skills. The fundamentals of an effective program -- preparation, action, reflection, and celebration -- are explained. Discusses service learning for students with disabilities, covering curricular modifications, technology, and partial participation. Describes possible projects for students with varying abilities and needs. Outlines social, personal, and intellectual outcomes of service learning. Offers techniques for meshing service with instruction and for developing supportive relationships in schools and communities. The final part provides ideas by listing activities and projects organized by skill or by a particular issue. The skill activities include: determining abilities and interests, communication, and problem solving. The issues section includes projects dealing with the environment, literacy, poverty, senior citizens, substance abuse, tolerance, and serving the school. Activities are designed to mix and match in order to tailor individual programs.

This report presents the feelings, ideas, and recommendations of 349 individuals in Illinois who attended Circle of Helping meetings, seven regional meetings held in early 1990 to create momentum for intergenerational program development, to increase awareness of the benefits of intergenerational programs, and to emphasize the interdependence of generations. A summary of the meetings focuses on such issues as generational conflict and harmony, aging education, getting started, intergenerational communication, and public relations. A section on strategies for the future considers the possibility of schools in the future including older adults as an integral part of all educational levels. A total of 13 recommendations are made in the areas discussed in the summary section. One important aspect of the Circle of Helping meetings was to highlight model intergenerational programs already in operation; a section on intergenerational service learning model programs briefly describes such programs in the areas of national intergenerational programs, day care, nursing home visiting, career days, adopt a grandparent, reading and literacy, tutoring, students serving seniors, latchkey programs, pen pals, mentoring, library programs, special events, guest lectures, oral history/interviewing/storytelling, patient simulation, social clubs and camps, drug abuse prevention, pregnancy prevention, advocacy, delinquency prevention, the arts, and health. Education model programs for the aged are also described. Relevant materials are appended. (ERIC)

Issues in requiring community service for high school graduation are addressed in this document. The debate is not whether community service is valuable, but whether making it mandatory lessens its positive effects. Proponents of mandating student volunteerism argue that it provides a valuable learning experience; gets all students involved; creates school/community links; ensures a wide ranging service program for each district; and teaches responsibility. Opponents raise the following concerns: cost and adequate resources; liability; evaluation; and the unpopularity of mandates. The elements of a community service action plan, whether voluntary or mandated, are outlined: the orientation program; the action; periodic school supervision; student reflection and evaluation. Eight stages of community planning are also highlighted. A final consideration is that of the school board member's role (ERIC).
