Metric And Decimal System In Afghanistan

By M. MAHMOOD

In Afghanistan the metric and decimal system is being adopted as the standard system of measurement. The metric system, which is based on the decimal system, is being adopted in various sectors of society, including education, commerce, and government.

The adoption of the metric system is part of the country's efforts to modernize and align with international standards. This system is expected to simplify calculations and make trade and commerce more efficient.

The metric system uses prefixes such as kilo (k), hecto (h), deka (da), deci (d), and centi (c) to denote multiples or fractions of the base unit. This system is widely used in scientific and technical fields and is also adopted by many countries around the world.

In Afghanistan, the metric system is being gradually introduced in schools, with the aim of ensuring that students learn this universal system of measurement from an early age. The government is also working on the development of infrastructure and standards to support the adoption of the metric system.

The metric system is expected to bring numerous benefits to Afghanistan, including improved accuracy in measurements, easier conversions between units, and greater compatibility with international trade and scientific research.

The adoption of the metric system is a significant step forward in the modernization of Afghanistan and aligning with the global standards. It is anticipated that this system will lead to increased efficiency and productivity in various economic sectors.
