Institutionalized Service-Learning in the 50 States

March 2001

Introduction

Service-learning is a teaching method that combines service to the community with classroom curriculum. Service-learning is more than merely community service. It is a hands-on approach to mastering subject material while fostering civic responsibility. On a programmatic level, service-learning in America is thriving. Through funds from the Corporation for National Service, almost every state has resources and some level of a service-learning program. Although practitioners and other service-learning advocates have long regarded service-learning as a way to increase student achievement and student civic engagement and decrease a host of problems, such as drop-out rates and school crime and violence, there is now a growing interest from policymakers. They are beginning to wonder what service-learning policy looks like and what other states are doing with service-learning policy.

This 50-state policy scan is a snapshot look at where states are with the institutionalization of service-learning. The scan used a narrow approach to service-learning, excluding language like community service, community restitution and other more broadly defined terms. The focus is on policy only, at the state level. The scan shows whether a state has a policy with respect to service-learning in its:

- State Constitution
- State Statutes
- State Codes or Regulations
- State Board of Education Regulations (in many states these are the same as the state codes and regulations).

Because there are several states with no policies on service-learning, the scan also includes brief information on funding mechanisms and programs specific to service-learning. This will inform the reader that the state is still engaged and interested in service-learning, but it has currently not reached the policy level of implementation. It is important to note that the amount of state policies a particular state may have does not necessarily reflect how deeply involved they are with service-learning. It is merely a gauge of the institutionalization and stability of the service-learning program. State policy reflects a certain level of validity that grant funding and programs do not. Without supportive public policies and the large-scale, long-term changes they can bring, funding could be taken away from service-learning programs, thus terminating them, whereas the institutionalization of a state statute or policy legitimizes the program through the law.

Analysis

As of December 2000, 23 states have no mention of service-learning in any state policy. Some of those states do make reference to character education and community service in their state education standards, but for the purposes of this scan, both character education and community service have a different meaning than service-learning. Most of those 23 receive funds from the Corporation for National Service and use those funds to implement programs through the state department of education. At least eight states had proposed legislation relating to service-learning in the 2000 legislative session, and though none passed in that session, it may be an indication of interest among policymakers during the 2001 session. There are no states with service-learning mentioned in the state constitution; 16 states mention service-learning in statutes; and 23 states mention service-learning in either their state code or regulations (including their state board of education regulations).

Most policies that are specific to service-learning fall into these categories:

- The state permits community service or service-learning activities to be applied toward graduation requirements (seven states – AR, CT, DE, MN, OK, RI, WI)
- Service-learning is a requirement for graduation (one state – MD)
- Rules, regulations, creation or purpose of programs relating to service-learning (eight states – AR, CA, GA, ID, IL, LA, MT, UT)
- The state encourages the use of service-learning as a mechanism for increasing student achievement and engagement (11 states – CA, CT, FL, IN, MI, MS, NC, SC, TN, TX plus DC)
- Service-learning is included in the state's education standards (six states – ID, MI, MN, NJ, NM, VT)
- The authorization of funding appropriations and the creation of service-learning activities and programs (six states – MA, MN, MS, NJ, NM, VT)

Proposed Legislation:

California

- A.B. 1911, would encourage governing boards of school districts maintaining grades 9-12 to offer students courses that include service-learning (August 24, 2000, In Senate Committee on Appropriations – not heard).
- S.B. 919, would require the California Postsecondary Education Commission to develop a Master Plan for Service Learning (September 1, 1999, In Assembly Committee on Appropriations)

Hawaii

- S.R. 69, a proposed service-learning high school graduation requirement (April 3, 2000 – no carryover)

Idaho

- H.B. 727, a proposed service-learning high school graduation requirement (March 16, 2000 – no carryover)

Iowa

- S.B. 2172, would provide incentive grants to school districts for service-learning education (June 22, 2000 – no carryover)

Massachusetts

- S.B. 261, S.B. 264, S.B. 288, all relate to the establishment of Community Service-Learning Initiative (June 12, 2000 – from Joint Committee on Education, Art and Humanities)

Missouri

- H.B. 352, H.B. 1179, H.B. 1221 relate to encouraging and tracking service-learning activities and providing technical assistance to school districts throughout the state in both K-12 and higher education (January 6, 11 and 13, 2000 – House Committee on Education)

New Mexico

- S.B. 9a, would allow funds from the Next Generation Trust Fund to go toward service-learning activities (vetoed by governor, April 4, 2000)

New York

- A.B. 2891, S.B. 807, relate to service-learning activities in public universities (January 12, 2000 – no carryover)

Conclusion

Service-learning still has a long way to go before it is institutionalized in the education policy structure of states. As more evidence is collected regarding the effectiveness of using service-learning as a strategy to achieve outcomes that policymakers care about, we will see more movement toward state policies that support service-learning. Until then, the growing excellent programmatic base of service-learning will continue to make service-learning a visible mechanism for increasing student achievement.
