

3-8-2012

Benefits of Courtroom Cameras Outweigh Costs

Jeremy Harris Lipschultz

University of Nebraska at Omaha, jeremy.lipschultz@gmail.com

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.unomaha.edu/commfacpub>

 Part of the Communication Commons, and the Courts Commons

Please take our feedback survey at: https://unomaha.az1.qualtrics.com/jfe/form/SV\_8cchtFmpDyGfBLE

---

Recommended Citation

Lipschultz, Jeremy Harris, "Benefits of Courtroom Cameras Outweigh Costs" (2012). Communication Faculty Publications. 80.

<https://digitalcommons.unomaha.edu/commfacpub/80>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the School of Communication at DigitalCommons@UNO. It has been accepted for inclusion in Communication Faculty Publications by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@UNO. For more information, please contact unodigitalcommons@unomaha.edu.

HOTLINE BUZZ

RSS FEED

LATEST COMMENTS

Real-time comments on legal news by newsmakers, activists, legal experts and special guests...

📅 Friday, March 09, 2012

Benefits of Courtroom Cameras Outweigh Costs

March 9, 2012 1:03 PM ET

JURIST Guest Columnist Jeremy Lipschultz of the University of Nebraska at Omaha says that permitting court proceedings to be televised will enhance transparency in the judicial system and create a more informed and engaged citizenry...

- ▶ Examining the Constitutionality of Abortion Clinic Buffer Zones
February 10, 2014
- ▶ Legal and Sensible: Kansas' Dual Voter Registration System
February 3, 2014
- ▶ JURIST Podcast - Prison Reform
January 30, 2014
- ▶ Court Errs in Staying Injunction Against Texas Abortion Law
January 22, 2014
- ▶ click for more...

CONTACT

E-mail your comments on this blog or anything else on JURIST to JURIST@jurist.org

The Illinois Supreme Court recently authorized the use of television cameras and "other recording devices" for "extended media coverage" of the courts in the state. For the first time, this extends access in that state to all trial courts following an appellate experiment that began in the 1980s. It took the efforts of Illinois Supreme Court Chief Justice Thomas Kilbride to "bring more transparency and accountability" to the sometimes troubled Illinois criminal justice system.

I welcome what the late Bill Miller, former University of Illinois-Springfield professor, would tell his graduate public affairs reporting students: "Let the sun shine in!" As one of his graduate students in 1980-81, I was lucky enough to cover the Illinois Supreme Court. Later, as a radio news director in Indiana, I fought battles for open meetings, open records and open courtrooms. I was a young reporter in those days, and it was not easy to question a tough old judge with a reputation for barking orders, a public utility board known for its secret sessions or a police chief with something to hide. In a couple of cases, people I covered later went to prison for their crimes. It is these thoughts that lead me to this question: Why is the US Supreme Court afraid of full public access to their oral arguments?

While some argue that cameras have turned courtrooms into entertainment spectacles, digital video makes no sounds, requires no lights and injects no distractions. Judges and lawyers should be mature enough to do their jobs in public view. The production later of edited transcripts and audio recordings is not timely enough for journalists, and these may be edited.

Recently, when the Supreme Court questioned lawyers during oral arguments on the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) broadcast indecency policy, I waited for days to obtain accurate information. Interested parties could not even have access to a live audio stream, as was the case more than a decade ago in the also interesting arguments of Bush v. Gore. In the indecency case, news of the arguments finally trickled out in blog postings and articles days later, as if we lived in the nineteenth century. This was not the situation in two earlier US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit oral arguments on broadcast indecency that were broadcast live on C-SPAN. I have used these videos as excellent teaching tools in my classes. My students see the videos and then they are required to reargue the case. The openness of the Second Circuit helped me bring the law to life for non-lawyers, which should be an important element of promoting an engaged citizenry.

Further, there is no reason to assume that every federal criminal and civil courtroom across our nation is honest. If there is one crooked lawyer or judge, one bankruptcy magistrate profiting from politics or one defendant being railroaded because of poverty or race, then a truly open courtroom is worth any danger of grandstanding courtroom dramatists.

The Radio-Television News Directors Association (RTNDA) long argued for electronic media access by allowing reporters to use their tools of the trade — cameras and microphones, just as newspaper reporters could take written notes. The same can be said today for bloggers and mainstream media alike — silenced smart cell phones should be usable and would actually avoid the disruption of the mad dash for the door in hopes of beating the competition with a verdict.

If Professor Miller were alive today, he would ask: "Why are you afraid of the public?" Fortunately, his dream of open government in Illinois is slowly unfolding. I can only hope other states, as well as our federal government, will follow this significant development.

Jeremy Lipschultz is the Director of the School of Communication at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. He has written several articles on the subject of communication in a modern context and is the author of the book, Broadcast and Internet Indecency: Defining Free Speech.

Suggested citation: Jeremy Lipschultz, Benefits of Courtroom Cameras Outweigh Costs, JURIST - Hotline, Mar. 9, 2012, <http://jurist.org/hotline/2012/03/jeremy-lipschultz-courtroom-camera.php>.

---

This article was prepared for publication by Stephen Krug, an assistant editor for JURIST's professional commentary service. Please direct any questions or comments to him at professionalcommentary@jurist.org

---

Opinions expressed in JURIST's Hotline are the sole responsibility of their authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of JURIST's editors, staff, or the University of Pittsburgh.

---

© JURIST Legal News and Research Services, Inc., 2013. JURIST is a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization. E-mail inquiries, changes, news tips, URLs, corrections, etc. to JURIST@jurist.org. This site is not an official site of the University of Pittsburgh. The University of Pittsburgh is not responsible for its content. Nothing on this site is intended as legal advice. If you have a legal problem, please consult an attorney. ■