Voices of revolution: Lessons of the Lebanese tragedy

A political news analysis

The Lebanese political scene is currently engaged in the same questions that have been discussed since the beginning of the civil war. These questions revolve around the state's role in the economy, the role of the military, and the Palestinian problem. The situation is further complicated by the presence of foreign forces, including the United States and France.

The economy is facing a critical situation due to the continuous war and the inter-communal violence. The government is struggling to provide basic services to the population, and the country is on the brink of economic collapse. The situation is worsened by the presence of foreign troops, which are seen as a threat by the Lebanese people.

The military, on the other hand, is seen as the only force capable of maintaining order and ensuring national security. However, the military's role is controversial, as it is accused of being involved in political decisions and using violence to maintain control.

The Palestinian problem is another major issue. The presence of Palestinian refugees in Lebanon has led to tensions and conflicts between the different communities. The government is under pressure to find a solution to the Palestinian issue, but it is not clear how this can be achieved.

In conclusion, the situation in Lebanon is characterized by political instability, economic crisis, and the presence of foreign forces. The country is facing a critical situation that requires urgent action to prevent a complete collapse.

Afghan people support struggle for peace

The Afghan people are united in their support for peace and against any policy that may set back the peace process and end the fratricidal war. This was expressed by different Afghan leaders visiting the capital, Kabul, and the provincial capitals. The Afghan people have consistently called for peace and the end to the war, which has left millions of Afghans displaced and suffering from the effects of war.

Pakistan's support for Afghan resistance

Pakistan's support for Afghan resistance should be seen as an extension of its traditional policy of seeking a balance against the Soviet Union and its allies. Pakistan has long been involved in supporting various Muslim groups in the region, and the Afghan resistance has been one of its main targets.

The course of revolutionary literature in the process of Saur Revolution—

The Saur Revolution was a pivotal moment in Soviet history, marking a turning point in the relationship between the Soviet Union and Afghanistan. The revolution was sparked by a series of events, including the perceived failure of Soviet policies in Afghanistan and the rise of a leftist opposition movement. The revolution ultimately led to the fall of the local Soviet-sponsored puppet regime and the establishment of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan (DRA).

Serving the interests of working majority

The first Revolution, which made the nation, is now waging the second, in which that very nation is losing its country. The second revolution, also revolutionary, is national and mass, and0 it is the struggle of the people against the capitalist class.

The working country has to continue the struggle of the world against imperialism. In the years of their trials, the workers have become more experienced and the international proletariat has learned more. The workers should continue the common struggle and defend the rights of the people of the world. A world revolution is the only way out.

Getting closer to people—an important task

The party's consistent reaffirmation of its commitment to the struggle for the well-being of the laboring masses, and its close relationship with the toilers of the country, is a moral duty incumbent on the party. It demands that we give concrete expression to the party's program in our struggle and in our work. The party's program—its program of socialist revolution—calls for the unity and solidarity of the working masses in their struggle against oppression, exploitation, and poverty. This is the program of the party, and it must be implemented in practice. We must work for the achievement of this program, and we must do so with the utmost dedication and determination.

Science Strides

The development of science and technology is a key factor in the progress of humanity. In the last few decades, we have seen tremendous strides in various fields of science, including medicine, engineering, and the natural sciences. These advances have led to significant improvements in the quality of life for people around the world.

The Soviet Union has made significant contributions to the development of space technology. The Soyuz 1-9 spaceship, launched in 1966, was a important milestone in the history of space exploration. It was the first crewed spacecraft to successfully dock with a space station, paving the way for future missions.

Statement of the communist and workers' parties of Arab countries

The communist and workers' parties of Arab countries have been active in the struggle for national liberation and social progress. They have stood firm in the face of oppression and exploitation, and have played a vital role in the development of their countries. The success of these parties is a testament to their commitment to the ideals of socialism and internationalism.

Peace and security is a must for all humanity

The current global situation is characterized by increased tensions and conflicts. It is essential that we work towards a world of peace and security for all humanity. This requires a commitment to diplomatic solutions, and the avoidance of military aggression. We must work towards the establishment of a just and equitable international order, and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms.
