ALGERIA'S DAY TOMORROW
People Look To Future With Confidence

ALGERIANS, Oct. 31, (Tass).—Tomorrow Algeria will celebrate the National Day of its struggle for independence. A festive spirit is already evident in the streets and squares of the city.

From flags of national flags of the Algerian and the Juba flag, to flower wreaths and bouquets of flowers, Algerians are expressing their solidarity with France in the struggle for independence. The 5th anniversary of the October 31, 1961, uprising against French colonialism is observed by Algerians every year.

Traces of War
An independent republic rose up in the ruins of the colony. But the struggles and martyrs who laid the foundation of this republic are still to be seen, everywhere in the capital. All windows are decorated with a large number of flowers and colorful posters. The Natural Sciences Faculty of Algiers is in full swing, and the remains of the destroyed buildings are being restored. The Wind howls in the half burned buildings of the Communications Department.

It has been a war demobilized thousands of villages, pitted vineyards with trenches, left barbed wire in the fields and mines in pasture lands, left thousands of displaced people, leaving their homes and concentration camps and refugees behind. The Algerian people are proving their identity in the face of the worst challenges.
