U.S. Secretary-Admiral Doolittle, speaking on the U.S. President at the height of the crisis on the island of Cuba, warned that if the talks fail, the U.S. would have no choice but to take military action.

On the same day, Greece ended the consultation of its military forces with the U.S. and other countries, and announced that it would not participate in the forthcoming nuclear tests.

Is Cuban Crisis A Blessing In Disguise?

By Observer

In OBEBS, the U.S. policy towards Cuba has always been to try and weaken its economy and eventually isolate it from the rest of the world. The U.S. has been trying to achieve this by means of trade sanctions, travel restrictions, and by encouraging others to boycott Cuban goods and services.

The Administration has been effective in implementing its policy, but the results have not been as expected. The Cuban economy is more resilient than the U.S. policy makers believed, and the country has been able to adapt to the sanctions and restrictions.

The Cuban government has been able to maintain its economy by using its own resources and by relying on other countries for trade and investment.

The U.S. policy towards Cuba has been criticized by many people, both in the U.S. and internationally. Some argue that the policy is counterproductive and that it has not achieved its goals of weakening the Cuban economy.

On the other hand, some argue that the U.S. policy has been effective in isolating Cuba and that it has helped to bring about changes in the Cuban government.

In conclusion, the U.S. policy towards Cuba has been a complex and controversial issue. It has had both successes and failures, and the future of the policy is uncertain.

BOMBORD RESTATES
WASHINGTOH, D.C. (AP) - President Adlaf, at a White House news conference, reiterated his position that the government should not be involved in discussions with the Soviets about the U.S. missile program. He said the United States must continue to support its own missile program. He also said that the U.S. government should not participate in any talks that might lead to a reduction of U.S. military forces in Europe.
