HOPE RISES AGAIN ON A TEST BAN ACCORD

NOVEMBER 3, 1962

PRESIDENT JOHNSON SAYS IN KABUL

Hope springs eternal in the breast of man, and the President of the United States, speaking from the capital of Afghanistan, said today that a new and hopeful outlook for a test ban accord is now possible.

"We have been working on this for a long time," said President Johnson in a surprise visit to Kabul. "The United States and the Soviet Union have been making progress, and we believe that a test ban agreement is now within reach.

"It is not certain that a test ban agreement will be reached," continued the President, "but we are optimistic that it is possible. The United States and the Soviet Union are both committed to making progress, and we believe that a test ban agreement is now within reach.

"The United States and the Soviet Union have been working on this for a long time," said the President. "We have been working on this for a long time.

For two days

PARIS: The United States and the Soviet Union, in a diplomatic initiative aimed at improving relations, have agreed to hold talks to discuss a range of issues, including disarmament and arms control.

The talks were initiated by the United States, which had been seeking to restart communications with the Soviet Union after a prolonged period of tension. The United States had expressed interest in exploring ways to reduce nuclear weapons and to curb the spread of arms.

The Soviet Union, which had been responding to the United States' overtures, had also indicated a willingness to engage in discussions. The two sides had agreed to meet in Paris, where they would discuss a variety of issues, including nuclear arms, conventional forces, and other matters.

The talks were considered a significant development, as they represented a step towards improving relations between the two superpowers. The United States and the Soviet Union had been engaged in a period of strategic rivalry, with each side seeking to gain the upper hand in the global power struggle.

The talks were expected to continue, with both sides hoping to make progress in the negotiations. The outcome of the talks would be closely watched, as it would set the tone for future discussions and could have implications for the global political landscape.

U.S.A. Inspects Three Soviet Vessels Leaving Cuba With Missiles

WASHINGTON, D.C.—(Special to the Times)—United States naval vessels patrolling off the coast of Cuba have inspected three Soviet vessels believed to be carrying nuclear missiles.

The vessels, which were spotted in the coastal area, were identified as having missile launchers on board. The United States Navy had been monitoring the area, and the vessels were spotted sailing towards the open sea.

The inspection, which was conducted by U.S. naval vessels, included a thorough search of the vessels' holds and decks. The inspection was aimed at verifying that the vessels were not carrying any weapons or military equipment.

The United States had been concerned about the presence of Soviet vessels in the area, as it had been reported that the vessels were carrying nuclear missiles. The United States had been monitoring the situation closely, and had been looking for any signs of missile activity.
