The problem of what has been called Interracial Intersexuality has attracted a great deal of interest among the public, primarily because it raises questions about the nature of human identity and the boundaries of sexual orientation. However, it is important to note that the term "Intersexuality" is often used interchangeably with "Interracial Intersexuality," which can lead to confusion and misunderstanding.

Interracial Intersexuality refers to the existence of individuals who are sexually attracted to members of different races or ethnicities. This term is used to describe the sexual attraction of individuals who are not of the same race or ethnicity as their partners. It is important to note that this term is not commonly used in the scientific community and is often considered to be a misnomer.

However, the reality is that there is a growing body of research that suggests that sexual attraction is not solely determined by race or ethnicity. Instead, it is influenced by a complex interplay of biological, psychological, and social factors. Therefore, it is important to consider these factors in order to better understand the nature of sexual attraction.

The study of Interracial Intersexuality is important because it can help us to better understand the complex and multifaceted nature of human sexuality. This knowledge can be used to develop more effective and culturally sensitive strategies for addressing issues of discrimination and prejudice in our society.
