QUESTION OF SOUTH WEST AFRICA

Under the United Nations Charter, the so-called "legalistic overweighing" of the League of Nations is not found in the charter of the United Nations. As the United States has not accepted a surrender to the League of Nations, the United States may, if it so desires, retain for the benefit of the United Nations an independent national government, with the ability to conduct its own affairs without interference from other nations. The claim that the United Nations Charter grants the United States the privilege of retaining as an independent nation a "special situation with respect to South West Africa" is not found in the charter either.

The question of South West Africa is a question of international law, not of internal politics. The United Nations Charter grants the United Nations the privilege of determining the fate of South West Africa, not of the United States. The United Nations Charter does not grant the United States the privilege of determining the fate of South West Africa. The United Nations Charter grants the United Nations the privilege of determining the fate of South West Africa, not of the United States.

U.K. Sets Military Command Againsts

Brunei Rebels

PAEUL, Dec. 16 (AP) — A new military command has been established to fight against a rebellion in Brunei that began last week. The rebellion started after the government's rejection of a proposal for a general strike.

According to the New York Times, the rebellion was caused by the unrest of the East Timorese, who are demanding more rights for their minority group.
