BILATERAL TARIFF CUTS

Outside GATT

MOVE TO KEEP POLITICS OUT OF SPORT

Bilateral tariff cuts outside GATT are seen as an important step towards keeping politics out of sport. The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) was established to promote international trade and reduce barriers to trade, but its effectiveness has been questioned by some who argue that it has failed to prevent political interference in trade negotiations.

The move to keep politics out of sport is seen as a positive development, as it is crucial for the future of international sport and the Olympic Games. The Olympic Games are a symbol of international unity and cooperation, and it is important that they remain free from political interference.

The move to keep politics out of sport is also seen as a way to prevent the kind of controversy that has marred previous Olympic Games, such as the 1972 Munich Olympics, where political interference threatened to disrupt the Games.

The move to keep politics out of sport is a significant step towards creating a more fair and equitable system of international trade and sport, where countries can work together to promote mutual prosperity and peace.
