U.S. BOARD HAS NO

JURISDICTION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18 (AP) - The U.S. Board has no jurisdiction over labor relations on foreign flag ships of American companies in Korea.

When the cases were argued, head lawyers

for the Board were heard by the United States

Court of Appeals in Washington in a test case brought by American operators of foreign flag ships against the Board.

The Board had been asked to determine whether American operators of foreign flag ships in Korea could be required to recognize the unions of Korean seamen.

U.S. Military Outposts Still
Dot France

President Johnson declared, last week, that his policy of placing greater responsibilities on the United States military in France and elsewhere in Europe is part of a broader effort to strengthen the armed forces of the Western Alliance. This policy is based on the assumption that the United States must increase its military presence in Europe to ensure the security of Western Europe.

The U.S. military presence in France is part of a broader effort to strengthen the armed forces of the Western Alliance. This policy is based on the assumption that the United States must increase its military presence in Europe to ensure the security of Western Europe.

In order to popularize the occupation of France, the United States military is working to improve the living conditions of the troops stationed in the country. The military is also working to improve the living conditions of the troops stationed in the country.
