Military Coup In Guatemala
New Government Pledges To Combat Subversion

GUATEMALA City, April 4 (AP) - The armed forces which ousted President Miguel Yzaguirre from power Saturday, said they would hold elections and establish a civilian government within three months.

The coup, which occurred after Guatemala's second largest city, San Jose, was seized by leftist forces, was announced by General Isidro Martinez, head of the General Staff of the armed forces.

The coup came as a surprise to many people in Guatemala, where the military has traditionally played a major role in politics. The country has been ruled by military dictators since 1954.

Guatemalan Coup puzzles.

Washington officials were puzzled on Sunday by the announcement of a new Guatemalan government. The new president, Mr. Alvarado, had been named by the military junta, which had overthrown the previous government.

The military, however, was not pleased with the announcement. They had been expecting a morestable government, which would have been more in line with their interests.

Another source of confusion was the fact that the new government was not recognized by the United States, which had been one of the main supporters of the previous government.

Still another possibility was that the new government had been formed by the military junta, which had taken over the government last week.

The military had been seeking to maintain control, but the new government had been formed by the military junta, which had taken over the government last week.
