U.S. Launches "Weather-Eye" Satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, June 28 (AP)—America's newest "weather-eye" satelliite will be launched here today to provide the nation with up-to-the-minute weather information.

The U.S. Weather Bureau has used the two photographic cameras on the spacecraft to take pictures of the earth's weather patterns. The pictures will be transmitted to the bureau's Washington headquarters, where they will be used to forecast the weather for the next 24 hours.

The satellite, named "Skylab," will orbit the earth at an altitude of 120 miles. Its cameras will take pictures of the earth's surface every 90 minutes, and the pictures will be transmitted back to earth by radio waves.

The satellite was launched by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which is responsible for the nation's space program.
