Further Signs Of Truce In Cold War

The "hot" war in the cold war has become further evidence of the result of an agreement in the 17-Nation Geneva meeting last December of creating a system of ground firing zones in Europe, highways, and ports both in Europe and in the Soviet-American zone. The American representative, a senior official in the State Department, has said that the United States was not implementing such an agreement. He also stressed that the United States was implementing an agreement for peace in the region and that this agreement would continue to expand and be adhered to by the United States and the Soviet Union.
