Israel Retains 165 Iranians

The United States and other countries have agreed to the release of 165 Iranian detainees held in custody in Abu Dhabi, the capital of the United Arab Emirates. The move came following consultations between the two sides aimed at resolving the tension between Washington and Tehran.

Israel Defense Minister Avigdor Liberman announced that the detainees, who were arrested for various reasons, would be released as part of the ongoing efforts to improve ties between the two countries.

The detainees included 162 Iranians and three Americans. They were held in Abu Dhabi for more than a year under various charges, including illegal entry and possession of arms.

The release of the detainees comes amid growing concerns over the possibility of a military confrontation between Israel and Iran in the region.

The United States has repeatedly warned of the risks of a conflict in the Middle East, while Iran has denied any plans to attack Israel.

The announcement by Israel marks a significant step towards normalizing relations between the two countries, which have been strained due to the ongoing dispute over Iran's nuclear program.

The move is expected to be welcomed by the international community, which has been pushing for a diplomatic solution to the region's conflicts.

Israeli and Iranian officials have expressed interest in expanding economic and cultural exchanges, although these initiatives have been overshadowed by the ongoing military tension in the region.

The release of the detainees is also seen as a gesture of goodwill from Israel, which has been under pressure from the international community to reduce its military activities in the Middle East.

The United States has been urging Israel to exercise restraint in its operations in the region, particularly in Syria, where Israeli forces have been repeatedly accused of carrying out air strikes against Iranian targets.

The release of the detainees is likely to be viewed as a positive step towards de-escalating the tension in the region, although it remains to be seen whether it will lead to a broader thaw in relations between Israel and Iran.
