UN General Assembly Marks Anniversary Of Human Rights Declaration Today

TODAY, 16 December, marks the 40th anniversary of the United Nations' Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The declaration was adopted on December 10, 1948, by the United Nations General Assembly.

The declaration includes 25 articles, each of which sets out a specific right or liberty. It has been widely endorsed by governments around the world and is often referred to as the "Bill of Rights".

A report by the UN Human Rights Office, entitled "The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: A Guide for States," was released today. The report provides a comprehensive overview of the declaration's history and significance, as well as a list of key provisions.

The declaration has been widely criticized by some countries, especially those with poor human rights records. However, it is generally regarded as a milestone in world history and has played an important role in shaping modern human rights law.
