Johnson Urges Step Toward Disarmament In New Year's Message To Soviet Leaders

NEW YORK, January 1, 1969, (AP).-President Johnson's New Year's Day message to Soviet Premier Kosygin and his people provided a buoyant note in a day of realistic words of confidence, reduced tension and optimism in the diplomatic, economic and strategic relations between the two great nations.

The President's message to the Soviet Premier, broadcast on radio and television, was the first such address to a Communist leader since the end of World War II.

"The United States is determined to prevent an arms race that would only increase the threat to the peace and security of both of our countries and the world," the President said.
