Thousands Join First Day Of March For Voting Rights

MLK, Alabama March 21.

KING: "We have had a hot time trying to line this road, and I am tired of being hot anymore." The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., one of the 50,000 Civil Rights marchers on the first leg of a 50-mile, five-day pilgrimage from Selma to the Alabama capital, said yesterday. "I am tired of being hot anymore."

King led his 50,000 Negro pilgrims from Selma to Montgomery yesterday in a mass demonstration against the trends of white supremacy in the South. The marchers say they are determined to register Negroes to vote and to promote the equality of race in the South.
