UN IN A CHANGING WORLD

By M. Rashid

Following is the statement of Rashid’s speech at the UNESCO conference in New York on June 25, 1980. It was attended by representatives from 138 countries, including 27 non-aligned countries.

Several years ago, the world was at the beginning of the Third World War. The war has now come to an end, but this is not the time to celebrate. This is a time to reflect on the lessons of the past and prepare for the future.

What happened during the war? What can we learn from this experience? How can we prevent future wars? These are the questions that must be answered.

The world has changed significantly since the end of the war. Technology has advanced, and new threats have emerged. The world is now a global village, and we must work together to solve the problems that challenge us.

The United Nations has a critical role to play in this new world order. It must be strengthened and reformed to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

We must also remember that the war was not just about technology and science. It was about human nature and the way we relate to each other.

The world is changing, and so are we. We must adapt to the new realities and work towards a more peaceful and prosperous future.

Individual Incentives And Productivity

By C. Mohan

High incentives can be used to increase productivity. This is particularly true in the case of workers who are paid by commission. They are more likely to work harder and produce more when they know that their earnings depend on their performance.

However, incentives must be carefully designed to avoid negative consequences. For example, if a worker is paid a bonus for every unit produced, they may be encouraged to produce defective products. The goal should be to create an environment in which workers are motivated to produce high-quality products.

Child Malnutrition A Serious Problem Here

BY A READER REPORTER

In the United States, child malnutrition is a serious problem. However, the situation is even worse here. Many children go to bed hungry every night, and their health and development are at risk.

The government has taken some steps to address this issue, but more needs to be done. We must work together to ensure that every child has access to nutritious food and medical care.
