Role Regional Courts Could Play

One of the ways to achieve world peace through world law is to have regional courts, which could be established by the United Nations. The establishment of international courts is not new, India, for example, has had them for many years. But the world has never had such courts.

The writer understands that the United States is considering the establishment of an international court to handle cases that involve more than one country. This is a good move, but the writer feels that the establishment of a regional court is even more important.

The writer has heard that some countries have considered the idea of establishing a regional court, but there is no consensus on the issue. The writer thinks that if there were a regional court, it would be able to handle cases more efficiently.

Further Consultations Suggested To Follow Exchanges Between E. W. German Leaders

Further consultations are suggested to follow exchanges between East and West German leaders. The writer understands that the East German leader has visited West Germany, and the West German leader has visited East Germany.

The writer feels that these exchanges are important, but the writer thinks that more needs to be done. The writer suggests that the two sides should meet again soon to discuss the issues.

Criminal Procedure Decree Law

The writer has heard that a criminal procedure decree law has been passed. The writer understands that this is a good move, but the writer thinks that more needs to be done.

The writer has heard that the law is not clear, and that it will be difficult to enforce. The writer suggests that the government should make the law clearer, and that they should also provide the enforcement agencies with the necessary resources.
Soviet Warn Of Plot In Middle East

The writer recalls that sometime last November, when he visited the Soviet Union, his hosts repeatedly assured him that the Soviet Union was not concerned with the Middle East. The writer further recalls that the Soviet Union did not contribute to the peace effort in the Middle East and that it was an American idea, not a Soviet idea. The writer further recalls that the Soviet Union did not contribute to the peace effort in the Middle East and that it was an American idea, not a Soviet idea.

Role Regional Courts Could Play

One of the ways to achieve world peace through world law is to make the world more a community, which is the object of the international courts. By United States Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who served as an international court judge, the idea of international courts is that they would be a way to settle international disputes. The writer further recalls that the Soviet Union was not concerned with the Middle East. The writer further recalls that the Soviet Union did not contribute to the peace effort in the Middle East and that it was an American idea, not a Soviet idea.
