February 2021

Bare Bones

William L. Blizek

University of Nebraska at Omaha, wblizek@unomaha.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.unomaha.edu/jrf

Recommended Citation
Blizek, William L. (2021) "Bare Bones," Journal of Religion & Film: Vol. 25 : Iss. 1 , Article 35. Available at: https://digitalcommons.unomaha.edu/jrf/vol25/iss1/35

This Slamdance Film Festival Review is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@UNO. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of Religion & Film by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@UNO. For more information, please contact unodigitalcommons@unomaha.edu.
Bare Bones

Abstract
This is a review of the short film, Bare Bones (2021), directed by Meryem Lahlou.

Creative Commons License
This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 License.

Author Notes
William Blizek is the Founding Editor of the Journal of Religion and Film, and is Professor Emeritus of Philosophy and Religion at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. He is also the editor of the Continuum Companion to Religion and Film (2009).
Bare Bones (2021), dir. Meryem Lahlou

This animated short film takes up a big topic: what does it mean to be a human being? We first see a creature crawling across a stark landscape. Then more come along. The creatures seem to have white plastic faces. Eventually the creatures stand and walk to a futuristic building. Here they march like ants. One seems to hang himself or herself. Another seems to fall to his or her death. The masks crack and the creatures become all bone.

In contrast to the creatures, we see on various occasions a cockroach crawling about the space filled by the creatures. Since cockroaches are believed to be able to survive any conditions, they raise the question of whether or not human beings will survive. Or will they disappear from the face of the earth.

We sometimes talk about our humanity or the human spirit. Sometimes we care about others or overcome great obstacles or show great courage. When we do, we express our humanity. But, we also show great callousness, even cruelty, toward others. We often take only ourselves into consideration: we act with great selfishness. This too is part of our humanity. Maybe our humanity is like the Force. It has a dark side and a good side and life is the struggle to overcome the dark side. If we give in to the dark side we might survive, but at what cost? If we overcome the dark side, we may not survive, but maybe it is better if we don't survive but live for a while with the good side of our humanity. Or, maybe our survival depends on our following the light.