U.S. Concern Over "Bogeymen"

WASHINGTON: President Lyndon B. Johnson assured Western leaders on his recent trip to Europe that the United States and its allies were united and determined to meet any threat to their common interests in the Far East.

"We are not going to stand by and let any machine be turned on us," he told the leaders. "We are not going to be intimidated by any bogeymen or bogeywomen or fabrications in the air."

Johnson said the United States and its allies had been working to improve their military strength and co-ordination, and that they were determined to prevent any aggression or provocation.

He added that the United States would continue to support the countries in the region, and that it would work to maintain a balance of power in the region.

In conclusion, Johnson emphasized that the United States was committed to the defense of its allies and to the maintenance of stability in the region.
