THE Boiling Pot of Algeria Needs To Be Cooled

BY MEMOR

The simmering tension in the Algerian crisis is a potentially explosive situation. The Algerian government has been trying to quell the unrest by negotiating with the FLN (Front de Libération Nationale, or National Liberation Front), but the FLN has been demanding greater autonomy and an end to French rule. The government'sfailure to address the FLN's demands has led to increasing violence and calls for terrorism.

In response, the Algerian government has been cracking down on the FLN, leading to further unrest. The situation has escalated to the point where Algeria is now facing a full-blown civil war. The government's efforts to negotiate with the FLN have been met with skepticism by the Algerian people, who see it as a means of delaying their demands. The FLN, on the other hand, sees it as a means of gaining concessions without fighting.

The United Nations has been involved in the negotiations, but so far, they have not been successful. The situation is becoming increasingly dire, with the possibility of a full-scale war on the horizon. The international community must take action to prevent this from happening.

Dean Exploins Why U.S.A. Wants Disarmament By Stages

OSINNA, May 15, (Reuter).—Mr. Arthur Dean of the U.S.A. told the disarmament conference yesterday, "we must not forget the existing military patterns while we obtain them." He said that in an attempt to work disarmament was the fact that both sides "announced" without any assurance to the other side that the announcement would be followed by a real disarmament program.

He said that the disarmament was in our interest because it would make it easier for us to solve other problems, and that it would also make it easier for us to solve other problems.

Dean gave as an illustration how we could not have been able to negotiate with the German leaders if we had not made it clear that we would work for the disarming of the German army.
