ALGERIAN REFERENDUM CAMPAIGN BEGINS

ALGIERS, June 11 (Reuters) - The political campaign for the referendum on French-style Algeria officially opened yesterday, but one of five parties so far to have announced its intention to stand in the July 6 poll is in favor of independence.

The referendum, a plebiscite on the question of Algeria's status as a country within the French state, is the third of its kind to be held in the French Sahara, Algeria and the Comoros.

The French government has made it clear that the referendum is an important step in the decolonization process of Algeria, which is scheduled to be completed by 1962.

The referendum campaign is expected to last for six weeks, and it is estimated that about 5 million votes will be cast.

The referendum will be held on July 6, and the results will be announced on July 12.

The referendum question is whether Algeria should remain within the French state or become an independent country.

The referendum will be held on July 6, and the results will be announced on July 12.

According to Mr. M. Spaak alluded to the possibility of Belgian troops remaining in the Persian Gulf for some time the other night. He indicated that the French Government would probably decide to send a force, possibly to cover the French interests in the area. The British, however, have not yet made any decision on this matter. Mr. Spaak also stated that the Belgian Government would not send any troops to the area unless it was assured of the safety of the French troops already there.
