A Blind S. Africa Throws Dust in World's Eyes

By OBVERSE

The South African government has become increasingly hostile towards the United Nations and the international community, with the result that the country is now facing a serious threat of isolation. The president of South Africa, Mr. Verwoerd, has recently stated that the country will not be bound by any international agreement or treaty that is contrary to the interests of the country. This attitude is likely to lead to further friction between South Africa and the rest of the world.

At a Glance

A radio broadcast, titled "A Glance at the Week's Press," was broadcast from Kabul on Wednesday. The broadcast included a summary of the week's events, including the South African government's decision to withdraw from the United Nations. The broadcast also included an interview with a prominent journalist who discussed the implications of the decision.

Afghanistan, a landlocked kingdom in the heart of Asia, cradled by mountain ranges, graced by gigantic peaks, and surrounded by the blue waters of the Caspian Sea, is the center of attention for many. Kabul, its capital, is the gateway to the region and a hub of political and economic activities. The Afghan government has taken several steps to improve the country's infrastructure, and efforts are being made to attract foreign investment. The country is rich in natural resources, and the government is actively seeking to exploit them.

Afghanistan Looks To The Future

Afghanistan has a unique geographical location, which makes it an important link between the Middle East and Central Asia. The country has vast mineral resources, including gold, copper, and coal, and the government is working on developing these resources. The construction of the new airport in Kabul, the capital, is a significant step in the development of the country. The airport is expected to start operations in the next few months.

Press Review

The Kabul Times, a leading Afghan newspaper, has been publishing articles on the country's current affairs. The newspaper covers a wide range of topics, including politics, economics, and culture. Recent articles have highlighted the government's efforts to improve the country's infrastructure and attract foreign investment. The newspaper has also featured interviews with prominent figures in the country, including government officials and business leaders. The Kabul Times is an important source of information for the Afghan government and the international community.
