Hope Rises Again On
A Test Ban Accord

By Observer

The New York Times

November 15, 1960

In the face of many setbacks and disillusions, a new hope for a test ban accord has emerged. The United States and the Soviet Union have shown renewed interest in continuing discussions on a test ban, which many believe could lead to a comprehensive test ban treaty.

In the coming days, experts from both nations will meet in Geneva to discuss the possibility of a test ban. The United States has indicated that it is willing to return to the negotiating table with the Soviet Union, provided that both sides are willing to make some concessions.

The test ban accord has been a long-standing goal of the international community, and its achievement would be a significant step towards reducing global tensions and increasing stability.
