U.K’S Decision To Resume Disarm Talks on November 26

NEW YORK, Nov. 16—The Soviet Union and the United States on November 16 started disarming negotiations in Washington, the British Prime Minister, Mr. Macmillan, said today.

But the British Government has decided that it will not start disarmament negotiations with the United States until the United Nations Security Council has taken steps to end the Vietnam war.

In 1965, the United States and the Soviet Union began negotiations in Moscow, but they have since broken down.

Mr. Macmillan said that the United States had agreed to accept the British proposal that the United Nations Security Council take steps to end the Vietnam war before the United States and the Soviet Union would begin disarmament negotiations.

Cuban Crisis Moves Into Dangerous Period

CASTRO’S THREAT TO FIRE AT U.S. RECONNAISSANCE PLANES

In a White House conference with the Executive Committee of the Cuban Cabinet, the Premier of Cuba, Fidel Castro, made a new threat to fire at U.S. reconnaissance planes, a move that may be intended to stir up a dangerous period.

In a statement delivered at Washington, a State Department spokesman said, "The United States has not received any new information indicating that the threat is serious or imminent."

The Cuban Premier told a Spanish newspaper that the United States would be "in much greater danger" if it should fire at the Cuban planes. "If the United States fired at our planes, we would be justified in returning fire," he said.
