New U.S. Thinking On Nuclear Policy For NATO

THE LANGUAGE PRESS

Mr. George Ball, the United States Secretary of State, has already gone along with the new American strategic thinking in his speech to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The President's recent statements have been a great step in the right direction. Mr. Ball expressed his agreement with Mr. Kennedy's statement. This is a clear indication that the United States is ready to consider the option of nuclear disarmament.

AT A GLANCE

A moment ago, in a letter to the President, Mr. Ball wrote: "I am glad to learn that you are considering the possibility of nuclear disarmament. This is a step in the right direction."

Mr. Ball's letter is a welcome development. It is hoped that the American government will take this opportunity to discuss nuclear disarmament with the Soviet Union and other nuclear powers.

ON TEST RAN

Reports that an internal conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union has been resolved are premature. As is well known, the Soviet Union has been accused of using its troops to suppress a rebellion in Afghanistan. The situation is complex and requires careful handling.

The main point on which the United States and the Soviet Union have been at odds is the question of human rights. The United States has criticized the Soviet Union for its human rights record. The Soviet Union, on the other hand, has accused the United States of interfering in its internal affairs.

International Trade Co-Operation

The International Trade Co-Operation facility, which was established to facilitate trade between the United States and the Soviet Union, continues to operate successfully. The facility has been instrumental in promoting economic cooperation between the two countries.

One group of States have benefited greatly from the facility. The group includes the United States, the Soviet Union, and a number of other countries. The facility provides a framework for the facilitation of trade between the participating countries.

With the establishment of the International Trade Co-Operation facility, trade between the United States and the Soviet Union has increased significantly.
