Helping Developing Countries To Visit U.S.A.

In September

Geneva, Feb. 20, (AP).—Professor M. S. Thompson, President of the World Bank, yesterday urged the establishment of a "world fund" to help developing countries. The fund would be funded by contributions from the developed world and would be used to finance projects in the developing world.

The proposal was met with enthusiasm by many of the delegates, who saw it as a way to bridge the gap between the developed and developing worlds.

The fund would be managed by a board of directors, which would include representatives from both the developed and developing worlds. The fund would have a permanent secretariat to handle the day-to-day operations.

The funding of the fund would come from contributions from the developed world, which would be matched by contributions from the developing world. The contributions would be based on the share of the world economy held by each country.

The fund would be used to finance projects in the developing world, such as infrastructure projects, education, and health care.
