By WALTER CRANE

WASHINGTON, D.C. - Secretary of State Dean Rusk said on Friday some Soviet troops were moving to the border of Afghanistan. He was asked by a reporter whether the Soviet Union had moved into Afghanistan and whether his department was aware of such a development.

Rusk said that he was not aware of any news of a Soviet military presence in Afghanistan. He added that he had not been informed of any military developments in the area recently.

Undersecretary of State for Security Affairs William E. Colby stated that the United States had no official representation in Afghanistan and that it was difficult to obtain information about military developments in the area.

Colby said that the information he had received indicated that the Soviet Union had moved troops into Afghanistan in recent weeks.

The Soviet Union has been in Afghanistan since 1979, when it invaded the country.
