In an article on Business and Industry published in KABUL TIMES, Mr. Shabbir, a young Afghan writer, has written:

"The Afghan economy is a mixture of the state sector and the private sector. The state sector is dominated by the government-controlled enterprises, while the private sector is dominated by foreign and local private enterprises. The government-controlled enterprises are mainly engaged in the production of goods for the domestic market, while the private sector enterprises are mainly engaged in the production of goods for the export market. The government-controlled enterprises are usually more efficient than the private sector enterprises, but they are also more costly. The private sector enterprises are usually less efficient than the government-controlled enterprises, but they are also less costly. The government-controlled enterprises are usually more responsive to the needs of the people, but they are also more bureaucratic. The private sector enterprises are usually more responsive to the needs of the people, but they are also more competitive. The government-controlled enterprises are usually more stable, but they are also more stagnant. The private sector enterprises are usually more dynamic, but they are also more risky."

DEVELOPING AND ENTREPRENEURSHIP

By NAVTEJ

Mr. Shabbir has written:

"The Afghan economy is in a state of flux. The government is working to develop the economy, but it is also facing many challenges. The government is facing a shortage of skilled workers, and it is also facing a shortage of investment. The government is facing a shortage of infrastructure, and it is also facing a shortage of technology. The government is facing a shortage of education, and it is also facing a shortage of healthcare. The government is facing a shortage of security, and it is also facing a shortage of peace."
