EMBASSY WASHINGTON - Afghanistan will increase its foreign public debt this year at a rate of $15 million, according to President Nasser Ohadi's budget presented to the Mazar-i-Sharif legislature on Tuesday.

The increase, which is not an unrealistic one, will be used to help cover the cost of the $342 million budget approved by the government last year, according to Dr. Ohadi, who is also the Afghan ambassador to the US.

The budget, which includes a 10 percent increase in military expenditure, a 5 percent increase in public works, and a 20 percent increase in education and health, was presented to the legislature in a joint session with a visit from the US ambassador to Afghanistan, Mr. William R. Brown.

The budget also includes a provision for the construction of a new university in Kabul, which will be the largest in the country.
