South Africa’s ex-Pdrts. exp. to South Africa last year amounted to 1,555,000,000 sterling, apart from large income derived from -tion of -my services, and substantial earnings of British undertakings in the Republic.

The United States exported more than 84,000,000 sterling during the first three months of this year. The figure had been 5,500,000 sterling better than the sterling over 1961. South Africa had also provided an export market for Sweden, Norway and Denmark, where an intensive effort had been waged against the Republic for many years.

Mr. Power, who was a leader of the United Nations Committee of Experts on the decolonization of South Africa and Namibia, said that the important contributory revenue from these export markets of South Africa would be effective in the development of the region and its prosperity.

"The Atom-Atoms are today in a key position in the United States," Mr. Power said. "It is clear that these important contributors have their proper role in the development of South Africa."

"The future of South Africa and the region depends on the development of these countries," Mr. Power said. "The United Nations Committee of Experts on the decolonization of South Africa and Namibia has made it clear that the future of South Africa and the region depends on the development of these countries."

"No doubt," Mr. Power said, "the United Nations Committee of Experts on the decolonization of South Africa and Namibia has made it clear that the future of South Africa and the region depends on the development of these countries."

"I am glad to say that there are signs that the future of South Africa and the region depends on the development of these countries," Mr. Power said. "I am glad to say that there are signs that the future of South Africa and the region depends on the development of these countries."
