EYE WITNESS ACCOUNT OF APARTHEID IN SOUTH AFRICA

"It is easy for the Jews in South Africa who are anti-apartheid to say that there are no whites in our country," said the black woman who witnessed the events.

A report of the International Women's Day demonstration in South Africa on Wednesday described the scene as follows: "The demonstration was peaceful and orderly, with no violence or disturbance. The authorities have assured us that the rights of all South Africans will be respected and that the demonstration will be allowed to proceed without interference."

However, when the police arrived, they used tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse the crowd. Several people were injured, and some were detained.

"We are being violated every day," said the woman. "This is not a place for justice or freedom."

Parents who speak out against apartheid are afraid for their children. One mother said, "My son was taken away a week ago and I have no idea where he is."

The state of apartheid is still in effect.

AT A GLANCE

"The town of X has a population of 20,000," said the woman. "There are three racial groups: white, black, and colored. The colored people are the poorest. They live in shacks and have no access to education or healthcare.

The town has a university, but only white students can attend.

The police are aware of the situation, but they do nothing to prevent it."

In conclusion, the situation in South Africa is dire. The government must act to end apartheid and ensure the rights of all its citizens.

South Africa Denounced As An "Outlaw Nation" By Ghana In Security Council

UNITED NATIONS, Saturday, Aug. 4, 1971

Ghana denounced South Africa as an outlaw nation today and asked the Security Council to consider expelling it from the United Nations.

Mrs. Angela Markie, the Ghana delegate, urged that the Council order U.N. member states to impose an arms embargo against South Africa because of that nation's growing tendency to change the world's political scene.

Because of its racial policies, South Africa is not a country, but a community which is not to be tolerated in the United Nations, she said.

The Security Council is to meet today to consider a request from the Organization of African Unity that it be informed of the situation in South Africa.

The United States, whilerejecting the emergency meeting, said it was ready to consider any proposal the Security Council might make.

A team of journalists and photographers arrived in New York last week from South Africa to report on the policies of the Republic of South Africa, which is now being investigated by the Security Council.

The United Nations is the only way to maintain peace and security, said the Ghana delegate.

She said that the United States was not fulfilling its obligations under the charter of the United Nations and that it was not acting in accordance with the principles of the charter.
