The daily trial by the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., of a case involving the interpretation of the Constitution, has been scheduled for a hearing on Thursday.

The trial involves a case brought by the plaintiff, a man named Johnson, who claims that the government has wrongfully taken his property without due process of law.

The defendant, the government, argues that it has the right to take private property for public use without compensation, citing the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

The case is expected to last several weeks and is expected to be a key test of the government's authority to seize property for public use.

Financial Assistance is Available
