INDEPENDENCE AND AFTER

By M. S. RASOOGI

With every day that passes, there is a growing sense of the need for Afghan independence. By the 16th of May, Afghanistan took a significant step towards that goal. It was 40 years ago that the Afghans declared their independence from British rule. This date is often referred to as "Independence Day." Since then, Afghanistan has faced many challenges, including a Soviet invasion in 1979 and the subsequent formation of the Taliban regime.

The paper devoted its editorial to the celebrations of the 40th Independence Day in Afghanistan. It emphasized the importance of remembering the sacrifices made by the people of Afghanistan during the war and the need for peace and stability.

There are several events planned to commemorate the Independence Day. The most notable is the national parade, which will feature military and civilian units from across the country. The parade will begin at 10 a.m. sharp, and the floats will come to a halt at 12 noon.

The day will also include musical performances, cultural displays, and speeches by government officials. The highlight of the day will be the flag hoisting ceremony, which will take place at the National Stadium in Kabul.

The Afghan government has called on all citizens to participate in the celebrations and to wear the national colors of green and yellow.

THE WORLD IN TEN YEARS

THE GREAT OMNIPROMISING ONES

By N. ASLAM KHAN

It is often said that the world has changed in the past ten years. In fact, the past ten years have been marked by significant changes in technology, politics, and society.

This change has been particularly noticeable in Afghanistan. The country has undergone a transformation since the fall of the Taliban regime in 2001. The government has been working hard to bring stability and prosperity to the country.

The United Nations has been involved in the process of reconstruction and development. The organization has provided assistance in the form of financial support and technical expertise.

The Afghan government has also been working with international partners to bring about change. The country has signed several agreements with foreign countries to support its development efforts.

These efforts have resulted in significant achievements. The economy has started to grow, and the country is now on the path to recovery.

The future looks bright for Afghanistan. The country is on the verge of a new era of development and progress.
150,000 To Demonstrate Civil Rights Today in Washington
Kennedy Calls For Equal Rights To All U.S. Citizens

WASH., D.C. (AP) — The U.S. flags guarding the White House along Pennsylvania Avenue were lowered to half-staff yesterday as the capital prepared for a demonstration to show its support for the anti-segregation laws passed by Congress.

The ceremonies, which included a symbolic torchlight parade, were held to honor the memory of those who lost their lives in the struggle for equal rights.

A crowd of 100,000 people was expected to gather on the north and south sides of the Capitol on Monday to voice their support for the new laws.

Speaking at the White House, President Kennedy said: "I am honored to be with you today to express my personal feelings of warm appreciation for your profound sense of civic responsibility.

"We are gathered here today to stand together and to express our common determination to work for a better America.

"We believe that our country is strong enough to face any challenge and to ensure that every child has an equal chance to realize his full potential.

"We are committed to making our country a land of opportunity for all people, regardless of race or color.

"We will continue to work for a world in which peace and cooperation prevail, and where freedom and liberty are cherished by all.

"Let us remember that we are all Americans, and that our country is our home.

"Together, we will build a better America, where justice and equality are the guiding principles.

"Thank you for participating in this demonstration and for your dedication to the cause of civil rights.

"I urge you to continue your efforts and to remain vigilant in the pursuit of equality for all.

"May God bless our country and our people.

"Thank you.

Kennedy then proceeded to the White House where he met with other leaders of the demonstration.
