GLOOM DESCENDING OVER BRITAIN'S NATIONAL ART GALLERY: DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S GOYA PORTRAIT LOST

Dr. LYNN FAIRPROS

There is no hint of gloom detected in a formal report on a wartime theft from the National Art Gallery. The report was made after a thorough investigation by the police force and by the security forces of the gallery. The gallery's director, Sir William Worthington, said that the theft of the portrait of the Duke of Wellington by Francisco Goya is a serious blow to the gallery's collections. The portrait was stolen from the gallery on October 10th, 1965, and has not been recovered to date.

The police believe that the thief entered the gallery during the night and made his way to the portrait, which is in a glass case in the gallery's main hall. The thief then broke into the case and removed the portrait. The police have no suspects at this time.

The gallery's loss of the portrait is a blow to the gallery's collection, which includes works by many of the great masters of art. The gallery is currently working to replace the portrait with a copy of the same size and style.

Security Council To Discuss Apartheid

UNITED NATIONS, Nov. 26 (AP) — The Security Council today requested the secretary-general to bring to its attention the fact that South Africa will not be represented at the United Nations.

The United States, which sponsored the resolution, said that South Africa will not be represented at the United Nations. The United States said that it would be held responsible for the international community.

They complained that South Africa was a "front line of the apartheid regime," and said that the United States should be held responsible for the international community.

New Road Shortens Distance Between Kabul and Charah

KABUL, Nov. 26 (AP) — The Afghan government has announced that it will construct a new road between Kabul and Charah, which is expected to be completed within the next year.

This is the second road to be constructed in the country, after the one between Kabul and Charah was built in 1978. The new road will be approximately 100 kilometers long and will connect the two major cities.
