U.S. WANTS TREATIES FOR STRAY SPACECRAFT RETURN
Resolution Reflects Kennedy Offer Of Joint Moon Expedition In This Decade

UNITED NATIONS, December 1, (AP).—The United States has made an offer to the United Nations of 188 million dollars to be spent on the search for any kind of space debris that may have been released from space vehicles, and the collection of damages for space accidents.

A resolution is being drawn up to have the United Nations be on the lookout for these objects. This resolution is said to be a joint effort of the United Nations and the United States. It is expected that many member states will give their approval. The resolution would join in the proposed treaty to the United Nations, and it is expected that it will be adopted there Thursday.

One source said the basic draft was prepared by the United States. Another source said it was a joint effort of several delegations. It is reported that the Soviet Union has not yet decided on it, but it is expected to be adopted in the near future.

The resolution, running to almost six pages, has four sections. The first section lists the states that are covered by the resolution. The second section lists the countries that are covered by the resolution. The third section lists the countries that are covered by the resolution. The fourth section lists the countries that are covered by the resolution.

The Political Committee will begin debate on outer space at 3 p.m. Monday. The first three speakers will be Deputy Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and the second speaker will be a representative of a country that is not a member of the United Nations.

First Investigation Gave No Indication How Trans Canadian Plane Crashed

JULY 11, 1942 (AP) — First investigations in the crash of a Trans Canadian Airlines passenger plane, which left Montreal and killed 29 people, have given no indication how the disaster happened.

The Trans Canadian Airlines plane crashed Friday night about 30 miles outside of Toronto. All persons on board were killed. The majority of the passengers were returning from the lake region in the Northeast.

Royal Canadian mounted police at the scene said that the plane had been flying at an altitude of 10,000 feet when it went down. The cause of the crash is not yet known.

KABUL: ANTIQUITY VANISHES INTO MODERNITY

Mr. Najibullah, a native of the Punjab, believes that the past is not the only source of inspiration. He has been trying to introduce modern ideas into the traditional culture. His approach is to blend the old with the new, creating a new form of art that is both rich and modern. He has been working on several projects, including a new museum, which he hopes will be inaugurated soon. He also plans to organize a series of cultural festivals to showcase the rich heritage of Afghanistan.
