Lippmann Suggests UN Take Part In Great Revolution As Year Of Cooperation Opens

WALTER Lippmann, noted American journalist, Monday called for a new United Nations organization to replace the one the United Nations created to deal with the atomic bomb. He said the new organization should be a broader one, encompassing not only the parties to the cold war but also the neutral nations of Europe, Asia, Africa and the Far East.

The conference yesterday was attended by 21 of the world's leading statesmen, including the heads of government of the United States, Britain, U.S.S.R., China, India, France and Italy. It was the first meeting of its kind since the United Nations was formed in 1945.

The Soviet Union was represented by its ambassador to the United Nations, Mr. V. M. Semashko. The Soviet delegation was headed by Mr. A. V. Tikhonov, who is also the Soviet ambassador to the United States.
