Peshawar Paper Comments On Afghan-Pakistan Relations

By SHAHRE BAZEL

There are two main schools of thought in the country regarding the Afghan situation. One school considers the situation to be a continuation of the war, while the other school considers it to be a peace conference.

The first school believes that the war in Afghanistan is necessary to defend the country against external aggression. They argue that the country is under constant threat from the Soviet Union and its allies, and that the war is a justifiable means of self-defense.

The second school, on the other hand, believes that the war is a failure and that it is time to seek a peaceful solution. They argue that the war has caused immense suffering and loss of life, and that peace would bring about a better future for the nation.

It is important to note that both schools of thought are equally committed to the cause of justice and peace. The difference lies in their methods of achieving these goals. The first school believes in armed struggle, while the second school believes in a political solution.

In conclusion, both schools of thought are equally valid and both have their merits and demerits. It is up to the government and the people of Afghanistan to decide which path to follow in order to achieve peace and justice.

Parlance Of International Relations Grows In Sputnik Age

By SHAHRE BAZEL

New terms are coined in every country to suit the political and economic conditions of the time.

In the Sputnik age, satellites, rockets, and atomic weapons have become the common terms of the political vocabulary.

For example, the United States has coined the term "Cold War," which refers to the state of tension and conflict between the two superpowers.

The Soviet Union has coined the term "Space Race," which refers to the competition to launch satellites and rockets.

In conclusion, the Sputnik age has brought about a new era of international relations, where the terms of the political vocabulary have changed significantly.

60 Years Ago People Wore Half-Stitched Coats During Id

BY A STAFF WRITER

If you were walking in the streets of Kabul 60 years ago, you would have noticed people wearing half-stitched coats during Id.

The reason for this was that there were not enough materials to make full coats, so people had to stitch parts of the coat together to make them wearable.

In conclusion, the half-stitched coats during Id were a reflection of the economic conditions of the time, where materials were scarce.

Imports Rise 14.5 Per Cent
In U.S. During Last Year

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—The United States imports in 1965 were the largest in many years, according to the Bureau of the Census, which estimated that the total value of the imports was $11.9 billion. This figure, which is $4 billion more than in 1964, is the highest in history.

The increase in imports was due to a rise in the price of many foreign goods. The Census Bureau said that the increase in the price of foreign goods was one of the main factors in the rise in imports.

The rise in imports was also due to an increase in the number of goods imported. The Census Bureau said that the number of goods imported increased by about 40 per cent, to a total of 4.1 billion.

The United States has been buying more goods from abroad in recent years. The increase in imports is consistent with the trend of the past decade, which has been a rise in the price of foreign goods.

The rise in imports is not expected to continue indefinitely. The Census Bureau said that the increase in the price of foreign goods is expected to slow down in the near future.
High Blood Pressure Results From Nervous System Changes

Great scientists have proved that high blood pressure is connected with changes in the nervous system.

In the nervous system, there are two states: the tonic and the phasic. The tonic state is characterized by a constant level of activity, while the phasic state is characterized by fluctuations in activity. High blood pressure is associated with an increase in tonic activity, which can be caused by various factors, such as stress, diet, and genetics.

According to the work of Dr. John, high blood pressure can lead to damage in the kidneys, heart, and brain. This is because the increased pressure can cause the arteries to become narrowed, which can lead to a decrease in blood flow to the organs. This decrease in blood flow can cause the organs to become damaged, which can lead to a variety of health problems.

In conclusion, high blood pressure is a serious condition that can lead to a variety of health problems. It is important to monitor your blood pressure regularly and to take steps to lower your blood pressure if it is high. This can include lifestyle changes, such as eating a healthy diet and exercising regularly, as well as medication if necessary.
