Bottomley Leaves For Zambia To Discuss Sending Troops

LONDON, December 1, (Reuters),—Commonwealth Secretary Anthony Bottomley left here last night for Zambia to try to break a deadlock over a British offer to send a squadron of royal air force jet fighters to Zambia.

Bottomley received instructions from Prime Minister Harold Wilson last week that the situation was «urgent» and he was told that Britain would withdraw troops to Lusaka if the Commonwealth failed to reach agreement.

By tomorrow morning, a Commonwealth representative will be in Lusaka to discuss the matter with the Zambian authorities.

Bottomley is expected to arrive in Lusaka on Christmas Day and will hold talks with the Zambian President, Kenneth Kaunda, and other officials.

The Commonwealth, which has been involved in the Zambian conflict since 1964, is now considering whether to dispatch a group of troops to help Zambian forces.

Unfortunately, the Commonwealth has not made any decision on this matter yet. It is currently discussing the issue with the Zambian authorities.

Non-Aggression Pact Between NATO, Warsaw Pact Nations Suggested At U.S. Conference

A non-aggression pact between the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the Warsaw Pact nations was suggested by a U.S. conference involving United States officials and representatives of the Warsaw Pact nations. The conference reportedly occurred in the United States, and was attended by officials from both sides. The purpose of the conference was to discuss ways to prevent conflicts and promote cooperation between the two opposing forces in the Cold War. The meeting was seen as a step towards缓和国际紧张局势, with both sides expressing a desire to avoid confrontation and improve relations. However, the outcome of the conference is yet to be determined. The details of the meeting, including the participants and the agenda, are not available in the provided text. It is important to note that such discussions are significant in the context of international politics and can have far-reaching implications for global stability.
